

Alleged conspirator charged with role in meth network

BY CJ BAKER
Tribune Editor

After putting the leaders of a large drug distribution ring behind bars, authorities are beginning to prosecute those alleged to have played smaller roles in the organization.

The Park County Attorney's Office recently filed a pair of felony charges against a 31-year-old Cody woman, Erin J. Clark. Agents with the Wyoming Division of Criminal Investigation say Clark distributed relatively large quantities of methamphetamine between January and July 2017, working with local ring leader William "Bill" Lee, also of Cody.

The charges specifically allege that, on a near-daily basis, Lee delivered a 3.5-gram "eight-ball" of meth to Clark at LaVina's bar and liquor store in Powell, where she worked at the time. After accepting the drugs through the establishment's drive-through window, Clark would sell them and pay Lee $280, charging documents allege, amounting to about half of the proceeds.

The case is based on statements that DCI agents gathered between the fall of 2017 and the summer of 2018 from confidential sources, Lee and Clark herself.

Clark was arrested in late March and charged with counts of conspiracy to distribute methamphetamine and possession of meth with intent to deliver. She pleaded not guilty in Park County District Court last week, with a trial tentatively set for June.

At a March 28 hearing back in Circuit Court, Clark's court-appointed defense attorney, Travis Smith, noted that the allegations were serious, but also fairly old.

AS PART OF EFFORT TO SAVE SPECIES, WYOMING SHIPS SAGE GROUSE TO NORTH DAKOTA

FIGHTING FOR SURVIVAL

BY MARK DAVIS

Leslie Schreiber slowed as the horizontal snow concealed a rare paved road north of Rawlins. But the wildlife biologist refused to stop.

This could have been any of 1,000 days in the life of the Wyoming Game and Fish Department biologist, but it was far from an average day. This was Schreiber's first in the field as the state's new sage grouse program coordinator. And on this day, the mission was to help the species fight for survival two states away.

A TRADE

The situation in North Dakota is dire. At last count, there were less than 10 male sage grouse counted on leks in the entire state. There's speculation that, should the species disappear there, they might also vanish from the South Dakota landscape.

North and South Dakota are two of only 11 western states with suitable habitat for the sage grouse, which are in decline. Several conditions led to a crash in population over the past decade, but most recently, scientists suspect West Nile Virus devastated already struggling populations.

Should they disappear in the Dakotas, it's likely to be interpreted as yet another reason to give sage grouse protections under the Endangered Species Act. And if the bird is listed, experts say that Wyoming — which has both the most habitat and the largest population of sage grouse in the world — has the most to lose.

To help each other, Wyoming and North Dakota have entered into a trade: Wyoming is sending as many as 100 male and 100 female sage grouse (including 50 females with their broods) over multiple years, while North Dakota is providing up to 200 wild pheasants; the pheasants will add some genetic diversity to the breeding stock at the Wyoming game bird farm in Sheridan.

Yet, according to David Dahlgren at Utah State University, the swap's greatest benefit to Wyoming isn't the new pheasants: It's the techniques that wildlife managers are learning about the best ways to move sage grouse from one place to another.

COUNTY PARTY CHOOSES LEADERS FOR COMING TWO YEARS

BY CJ BAKER

Republican officials in Park County can expect to take some heat if they step out of line with the party's core beliefs.

"I will support the elected officials, when they support the platform," party chair Martin Kimmet said at a recent Park County Republican Party Central Committee meeting. "But I will hold them accountable."

In a follow-up interview, Kimmet explained that, "this is a free nation ... and I can't tell them [Republican elected officials] how to vote, but I can make it known how they do vote and if they vote against the party platform."

Last year, Kimmet criticized county commissioners for leasing space to Northwest Wyoming Family Planning at the Park County Annex in Powell; he told the all-Republican commission that they weren't following the pro-life positions laid out in the platform. Kimmet and some other members of the party took issue with the fact that — although the family planning group does not perform any abortions and hasn't referred a patient to an abortion provider in years — the group is willing to make such referrals.

The local Republican Party also declined to provide financial support to state Rep. Sandy Newsome, R-Cody, in her race against Democrat Paul Fees in last year's general election; that's because Newsome ran for that seat as an independent — opposing Republican Party nominee Scott Court — two years earlier.

Kimmet has served as chair since mid-2017, and he was chosen to lead the county party for another two years at a March 28 meeting in Cody.

Spring break switch:

DISTRICT REVISES 2019-20 SCHOOL CALENDAR

BY TESSA BAKER
Tribune Features Editor

With the school year soon coming to an end, Powell kids are just about to go on spring break.

The week-long break coincides with Easter, but with the holiday in late April this year, it's creating some anxiety in the schools.

"In some years, connecting spring break to Easter would be fine. ... In other years, it directly falls within the [state] testing window," said Jay Curtis, superintendent of Park County School District No. 1.

The testing window opens this week, kids go on spring break next week, then testing will resume the following week.

When the school district adopted the calendar last year, Curtis said leaders would need to be reflective and flexible if there were "any glaring defects" with it.

"Those are defects that really are hard to see until you're living in the calendar," Curtis said.

Powell educators worry the week-long break could have an effect on the Wyoming Test of Proficiency and Progress (WY-TOPP), which is given to students in third grade through 10th grade each spring.

Kids will only have about three and a half weeks left of the school year following spring break.

Curtis said district leaders looked at possible ways to reschedule next year's spring break so it wouldn't be

Party: 'I hope that we'll all unite behind the party'

There was competition for four of the party's five leadership positions and the party's precinct committeemen and women generally stuck with the current leaders: Party treasurer Joyce Boyer of Cody was elevated to vice chair, Charles Cloud of Cody and Denise Shirley of Wapiti were re-elected as state committeeman and woman, respectively, while Jennifer Lohrenz of Powell was tabbed as the new treasurer.

'DRINKING THE KOOL-AID'

Kimmet retook the chairman's seat by collecting 38 votes to challenger Nina Webber's 31. Webber, a former Hot Springs County Clerk, also spoke of the importance of holding current and future lawmakers "responsible" for "their actions in Cheyenne."

In her pitch to the central committee, she said legislative candidates promise that "they're going to be for our like-minded values." However, "They get down to Cheyenne, they start drinking the libtard Kool-Aid and that's it — they start voting crazy," Webber said.

She indicated that she was generally concerned about how the Legislature voted on taxes.

Outgoing Vice Chairman Vince Vanata also urged the body to hold elected officials accountable to the county party's platform. It's a two-page, 12-point document that outlines what local Republicans stand for; it's revised and voted on by GOP committee people every other year. The positions in the current document range from opposition to restrictive government regulations to support for state rights to defining marriage as being between one man and one woman.

"We don't spend all that time in caucus and in convention beating those things to death to have our representatives, our commissioners, our senators ... turn around and say, 'Well, that's nice we have a platform, but I only believe in 80 percent of it' [or] 'I don't believe in the platform,'" Vanata said. "They represent us — communicate with them."

He also urged attendees to support the party by attending meetings and donating, warning that people are "coming in from all around" and trying to make Wyoming a Democratic state.

A BLUE WYOMING?

Bob Ferguson had issued that warning earlier, as he sought to become the party's vice chairman; Ferguson said he'd noticed a push to "turn Wyoming blue" in 2018 and suggested the state is vulnerable because of its low population.

"... Colorado, Montana, Nevada, a lot of those states used to be true red states, and with an influx of liberals, they're not anymore," Ferguson said. "And unfortunately, it wouldn't be that difficult to get an influx of people into Wyoming to flip it. And I want to prevent that with everything that I can."

Ferguson is a former Wall Street portfolio manager and former "high-end fundraiser" for the NRA on the East Coast. He moved to Cody in October, bringing GOP experience that included chairing his town's branch of the party and running multiple local and state campaigns. Ferguson said he left Connecticut, "because the political environment there was so toxic that a true conservative couldn't live there anymore."

Although he lost to Boyer — collecting 33 votes to her 35 — chairman Kimmet encouraged Ferguson to stay involved.

Boyer kept her own remarks brief: The former Park County Clerk of District Court said she'd enjoyed her four years as party treasurer and wanted to continue serving.

PARTY UNITY

Underscoring some of the tension within the party, Vanata said Boyer had previously remarked that she was too busy to be treasurer.

"How are you going to have time to be vice chairman?" he asked.

Boyer said she didn't remember saying that.

In her bid for chairman, Webber also drew a pointed question over her residence. Webber moved from Thermopolis last year, but said she'd been traveling to Cody two to four times a week over the last four years, while serving as Hot Springs County Clerk.

"If you've been here a year, how were you working in Hot Springs County — and is that why you weren't re-elected?" one precinct committeewoman asked.

Webber clarified that she'd moved to Cody at the end of 2018.

Kimmet himself came under fire from former party chair Gerri Hockhalter for not holding enough meetings; Kimmet said he would hold meetings as necessary and continue to work at uniting Republicans.

"I hope that we'll all unite behind the party, put our differences aside," Kimmet said. "Nobody's ever going to agree with everything."

Cody City Councilman Landon Greer, who made an unsuccessful bid for state committeeman, described the party as "very divided." Beyond calling for unity, he said the GOP should work to bring in some new faces.

"Hopefully the younger people can get involved with this party and not the other, which seems to be the way things are going right now," Greer said.

The central committee ultimately chose to stick with Cloud, a former Cody councilman, picking him over Greer by 54-15 margin.

Meanwhile, Shirley was re-elected as state committeewoman by a 37-32 margin over Sherry Johnson of Meeteetse.

"I just want to make 2020 a great year and make sure we get President Trump back in" while getting "good Republicans" in local offices like the Cody mayor's office and school board, Shirley said.

Lohrenz was unanimously chosen as treasurer.

Big Horn Ankle and Foot

Heel Pain

If you find that you are having difficulty getting out of bed in the morning because of heel pain, you probably have plantar fasciitis.

The plantar fascia is the tight band of ligament that makes up the arch of your foot. It can be unusually tight because of high arched feet, or overstretched because of flat or pronating (turning in) feet. Either cause, the ligament or fascia gets strained because of constant tension. After resting through the night, the ligament tightens, to remind you on that first step that you have a sore heel.

Of all the foot problems encountered, it is especially important to seek early treatment for heel pain. Recovery is much quicker with early intervention. If the pain is chronic, then there is sometimes a struggle to get the heel back to normal in a timely manner.

Several treatments exist for heel pain. There are medicines that can be prescribed to help with the pain and inflammation. A regimen of stretching exercises is usually instituted. In addition, special insoles can be placed inside your shoes. Ninety percent of the heel pain sufferers do not need surgery.

Other causes of heel pain exist. Heel pain at night can be a sign of decreased circulation in your feet. Another cause could include an unusually large spur or bone prominence of the heel. In many older adults, a loss of the fatty padding to the heel can be the source of discomfort.

The bottom line? Your heel should not be interfering with your activity level. If you suffer from heel pain, perhaps it is time to get it evaluated.

Bears prompt temporary closure of Heart Mountain Ranch Trail

Due to bear activity, the trail at the Heart Mountain Ranch Preserve is temporarily closed, The Nature Conservancy announced Monday. This is only a closure of the trail to the summit and other activities at the preserve will continue as planned.

"Bears are very active in the Northern Rockies at this time of year as they emerge from their winter sleep and begin foraging for food," the conservancy said in a news release. "We want to take every precaution possible to prevent any conflicts between people and bears — for the safety and health of both."

Conservancy staff will be monitoring the trail for signs of bears and will reopen the trail to public use when there seems to be less activity.

Staff always recommend that people be bear aware at any time they hike the preserve and, when possible, travel in groups. Once the trail opens, bear spray will be required for all hikers.

"We're asking our friends, neighbors and visitors for your patience and understanding as we make these decisions, and that we all work together to ensure that both people and wildlife remain safe," said Brian Peters, manager of the Heart Mountain Ranch.

The Nature Conservancy's 13,000-acre Heart Mountain Ranch Preserve, on the north and east slopes of the mountain, was purchased in 1999. The property is home to both a resident herd of elk as well as a large herd that migrates there in the winter. The preserve also boasts one of the greatest concentrations of rare plants ever discovered on private property in Wyoming.

For more information about the trail closure and reopening, contact the preserve at 754-8446 and watch www.nature.org/heartmountain.

State settles Medicaid fraud suit for $1,000

BY CJ BAKER
Tribune Editor

The Wyoming Attorney General's Office struck a deal with two local women who reportedly tried to defraud the state's Medicaid program.

The state sued disabled Fran- nie resident Linda G. Muller and her stepdaughter, Amanda K. Smith of Powell, in Park County District Court last summer. The suit alleged that Muller submitted timesheets to Medicaid that claimed she'd received $1,445.22 worth of care from Smith in February and March 2018. However, those documents were false, as Smith was actually being held in jail on misdemeanor drug charges at the time. Medicaid personnel and contractors caught on to the scheme after Smith was paid $746 for the first batch of bogus hours, stopping payments on the rest.

In August's civil suit, Wyoming Medicaid Fraud Control Unit Director Travis Kirchhefer asked a judge to order Smith and Muller to pay as much as $35,000 in damages and civil penalties. However, in early November, Kirchhefer said his office had agreed to drop the lawsuit in exchange for the two women paying $1,000.

"The parties mutually acknowledge the risks, expenses and uncertainty inherent in litigation and the advantages of resolving the allegations in the complaint without further judicial proceedings," says a portion of the agreement.

The $1,000 figure includes the $746 that Smith received for work she never performed, $80 to reimburse the state for the administrative fee it paid to a private payroll processor and a $125 civil penalty.

District Court Judge Bill Simpson formally dismissed the suit on Monday.

As part of the agreement, Muller and Smith had agreed to pay at least $100 per month toward the debt; in court filings last year, Muller had said she didn't have the money to hire an attorney while Smith said she had outstanding medical bills and health issues.

Wyoming Medicaid helps cover the medical bills of low-income and "medically needy" people — including allowing eligible individuals to receive care in their own home from caregivers they choose. According to the suit, Muller hired Smith as her direct service worker back in April 2017.

connected to Easter.

"The first goal was to get spring break into March somehow," he said.

They settled on scheduling spring break for March 16-20 (instead of April 13-17, as had been originally planned).

There was some talk about moving it a week earlier to coincide with the state basketball tournament, scheduled for March 12-14.

However, that would mean students who play basketball wouldn't get a break, Curtis said.

"Breaks are important — having a break to recharge the batteries is as important for those basketball kids as it is for everybody else," he said, adding that it "would be a disservice to a fairly large group of students and parents."

Students will still get a break at Easter next year, with no school on Good Friday (April 10) and the following Monday (April 13).

Curtis had hoped to align

Powell schools' spring break with Northwest College's; with both organizations employing hundreds of people in Powell — and some PHS students attending classes at NWC — he said it would be a really good thing for the community if the breaks were scheduled together.

However, due to various conflicts, "we couldn't get them matched up this [coming] year," Curtis said.

"President Hic- swa and I did kind of do a pinky shake that next year when they're doing their planning, that we would also do our planning ... and hopefully get our spring breaks finally aligned," he said.

The Powell school board initially approved a 2019-20 calendar in December, and gave the green light to the revised version last week, as a few days had to be shuffled. School will start one day earlier — on Aug. 26 — but will still end on May 28, as originally planned.

With switching a professional development day in January, students will actually get a longer Christmas break, with the last day of classes Dec. 20 and not returning until Jan. 6.

The revised version seemed to be well-received among administrators and other staff, Curtis said.

"I think the changes are good," he said. "Again, we won't know until we try it for a year."

Curtis told the board that no calendar is perfect.

"It really doesn't matter what you do — it's never going to be perfect," he said. "But I think this is about as close to it as we can get for our district at this point in time."

'Breaks are important — having a break to recharge the batteries is as important for those basketball kids as it is for everybody else.'

Meth: Clark only additional conspirator charged in Park County

"She [Clark] sat down with law enforcement [last year] after she had cleaned her act up and separated from these people," Smith said, adding that Clark is about halfway through the county's drug court program.

"Now," Smith said, "she's charged and sitting in jail."

Noting that his client cooperated with investigators, Smith said Clark "is trying to change her life and she's doing that," and he questioned if prosecutors were trying to send a message by jailing her.

In contrast, Deputy Park County Attorney Leda Pojman argued that Clark was still having run-ins with law enforcement, indicating Clark had recently violated her probation on other, misdemeanor charges.

Circuit Court Judge Bruce Waters slightly lowered Clark's bond last month, but left it at $25,000 cash, citing public safety issues.

"The fact that I can't ignore is we're talking about selling an eight-ball of meth a day for a long period of time ...," Waters said, adding, "Even though Ms. Clark may have turned over a new leaf, so to speak, that past conduct is concerning."

However, last week, District Court Judge Bill Simpson allowed Clark to post a $25,000 surety bond instead of cash; she made bail hours after the April 9 arraignment, allowing her to go free pending a trial.

Clark's case stemmed from DCI's multi-year investigation into a drug trafficking organization that was moving meth across Park, Big Horn and Natrona counties. During their work — which started in November 2016 — DCI agents came to believe that Lee was the area's largest meth dealer. They arrested Lee, his wife, two of his suppliers and an associate in early 2018; the five are now serving a combined total of nearly 45 years worth of prison time.

For more than a year, Park County Attorney Bryan Skorice has said that more people would be charged in connection with the investigation. DCI agents used various techniques in their investigation, including wiretapping Lee's phone and interviewing numerous confidential sources (CSs) and informants (CIs).

DCI Special Agent Chris Wallace, a Powell police officer currently assigned to the agency, testified at Clark's preliminary hearing that the motives of the CSs and CIs varied. Some were looking for leniency on an upcoming jail or prison sentence, others wanted to avoid being charged with crimes altogether and "some of them even told us they just wanted to be a good citizen; clean up their community," Wallace said.

The agent said that, while in custody last year, Lee shared information with law enforcement officials in a so-called proffer session "in an attempt to obtain a lesser sentence."

U.S. District Court records do not say whether Lee's efforts were successful, but in stipulating to a 135-month prison term for Lee earlier this year, the federal prosecutor on the case called it "a pretty forgiving sentence" for the repeat offender.

Wallace indicated in court that Lee offered information about a host of conspirators.

"With so many people we talked about with him, spanning from Gillette to Casper to Big Horn County to Washakie County to Denver, Colorado, yeah, we did not get specific dates [of drug transactions], but ... he gave us his best recollection of what he was involved with and who he dealt with," Wallace said.

As of Monday, Clark is the only additional conspirator to have been charged in Park County. While free on bond, she cannot leave the county without permission from Judge Simpson and must check in with law enforcement three days a week, among other conditions.

IN OUR OPINION

Being part of a caring community

If you ask a Powell resident why they choose to live here, there's a great chance they'll mention the friendly folks.

Time and again, the Powell community has proven itself to be generous and caring.

Many of these acts of kindness are small — a quiet hello offered to someone walking by, some baked goods delivered to a neighbor or a friendly wave given on a dusty rural road. Other efforts are much bigger, such as the seemingly weekly fundraisers that raise thousands of dollars for people suffering from serious illnesses or a loss in their family.

But beyond these spontaneous efforts, Powell is fortunate to have a network of dedicated non-profit organizations standing by to assist those in need. And, even more fortunately, we have volunteers willing to step up and lead those efforts.

While there are many examples of local residents offering their time and talents to help others, one of the most recent is the group coming forward to lead the former Powell Council of Community Services.

The council is best known for its annual Christmas Basket program, which delivers gifts and Christmas cheer to families in need, but that's only a fraction of the group's work. All throughout the year, the Powell Council of Community Services has offered financial assistance to folks who need a tank of gas, a prescription or help with an overdue utility bill.

Dave Blevins and Jim Carlson helped lead the council for decades, but they recently decided to retire.

For months, it was unclear who — if anyone — would be willing to step up and take over; it wasn't too far-fetched to worry that the council might go the way of other local service organizations and fold for a lack of interest.

But recently, an association of local churches, led by Powell Police Department Coordinator of Chaplains Chuck Hewitt, decided they would continue the council's work as the Powell Cares Alliance.

Hewitt and a group of local pastors will provide assistance to folks who are having a hard time — including by arranging counseling, pointing out possible job opportunities and making other efforts to help those people get back on the right track for the long haul.

"Between us all we'll decide how we can help that person," Hewitt said.

It's comforting to know that this "safety net" will remain available to Powell area residents.

We're also thankful that Hewitt and the Powell Ministerial Association were willing to take on this vital mission. After all, a caring community doesn't just magically happen: It takes people taking action — from volunteers who serve as a Big Brother or Big Sister to donors who provide food for Powell Valley Loaves and Fishes to friendly people willing to say hello to a stranger.

While the Powell Cares Alliance found the leaders it needs, we hope you'll consider other ways that you, too, can make our community a kinder and more caring place.

(Little has been written about the Japanese Relocation Center's second life — its continued occupation after the Japanese departed and Congress turned the property back to the Bureau of Reclamation. What had been home to some 11,000 Japanese people became headquarters for a final push to fulfill Buffalo Bill Cody and Theodore Roosevelt's vision to bring water to 120,000 acres in the Big Horn Basin. The bureau began hiring staff and advertising for homesteaders, attracting recently demobilized veterans to work on and homestead the Heart Mountain Division of the Shoshone Project.

Both staff and homesteaders came as family, moving into the recently abandoned housing. And, thus, the Relocation Center gained a new, if temporary, life. This and the next several columns describe a pre-teen's experiences during three years in what sometimes seemed heaven, sometimes hell.)

Columnist Pat Stuart — then Pat Reher — is pictured at the former Heart Mountain Relocation Center in 1950. After World War II ended and Japanese Americans were allowed to return to their homes, the camp became the headquarters for a homesteading effort. Courtesy photos

We were moving to Wyoming, the real West, the land of cowboys and Indians, of bears and antelope. Dad was waiting when mom, having driven us from Oregon, pulled our 1939 Plymouth Coupe to a stop in front of our new home — Unit 1, Goat Hill, Heart Mountain Relocation Center.

Mom's expression turned bleak as she looked around at rows of black barracks stretching toward a stub of a mountain, at fencing around a power sub-station embedded with tumbleweeds, at the treeless and barren ground. She would come to love Heart Mountain and the land. But that day in the spring of 1948, she only said, "Oh, Al," to my father, Alvin Reher.

At 8, I knew enough to understand her reaction to the grim and dismal surroundings and to our apartment's interior with its water-stained walls, window-sills sporting dusty hills, the heavy smell of coal fires, and the mineral-encrusted sinks, tub, and toilet bowl.

"Oh, Al," Mom was to say often in coming days.

But her problem was not ours. The Relocation Center might be grim — all browns and grays under a blue dome, all keening wind blowing dirt about — but it became clear straight away that we had moved to a kid paradise.

Unit 1, Goat Hill was a minuscule three-bedroom apartment, one of three units in our barracks and the same in some particulars as the barracks occupied by the Japanese. That said, the differences were striking. We had a kitchen and bathroom, both just large enough to flap your elbows but there. We had asbestos-based Celotex wallboard, shingles on the outer walls, linoleum laid over the floorboards and running water.

Compared to what the Japanese had called home, it was pure luxury.

The Jap Camp, as everyone called it (not understanding how politically incorrect they were), also had a kid around every corner — not just those belonging to the dozens of newly arrived Bureau of Reclamation families, but homesteader kids whose parents had drawn allotments and who were living at the camp until they could move the two barracks that went with their new land.

Our playground spread for acres, farther than we cared to run in every direction, with something exciting and interesting just around the next corner, for the camp was still mostly intact. Its public buildings remained, empty and loosely secured with some of their former fixtures left behind. We could play hospital in the hospital, school in the school, office in the office building and so much more.

We ran barefoot and wild, the soles of our feet toughening up on ground that was essentially a gravel pit held together by blow dirt.

"Come on, they're taking down the jail." That call took everyone who heard it on the run to a building that we called the jail, probably because they kept it locked up tight. We were avid to see inside. I got there too late; all that was left was the basement which was divided into sections by doorless concrete walls.

Wait a minute. A basement? No building in this place had a basement.

"They lowered the prisoners down there through holes in the floor," one of the bigger kids said. "Those are the cells."

I believed it but, then, I believed another building had been a crematorium.

"That's where they burned the bodies," older kids said of a brick something-or-other in the middle of a warehouse-like structure. A dummy hanging from the rafters underscored the point.

It was totally and satisfyingly scary. And why should I doubt? I'd heard about the concentration camps in Germany, and we all knew this place had been a concentration camp for "the Japs," as the adults called the former inmates. If the Nazis had ovens in their camps, then it seemed reasonable to think that we would have them, too. No moral quibbling for us.

More fun than anything were the guard towers. The ladders had been removed by someone who knew nothing about kids. No ladders? Well, clearly, we were meant to climb the crossbeams. Who needed a jungle gym; we had the towers until Andrea Hull fell and shattered a bone in one arm.

A few days later, only bare ground remained where the towers had been. No more could we brave splinters in our hands and legs to reach the top with our sandwiches, where we played at being guards. "Kapow! Got him trying to escape!" We also lost the visual reminder that this had been a prison, and we missed that. Gone was that special frisson of reality when making up stories of prisoners and guards in the shadow of the real thing.

The "H" shaped camp administrative headquarters stood just behind a monument (built to honor the Japanese soldiers who volunteered and fought in WWII) and only a minute away from our front door. The War Authority and bureau had cleared out without clearing up. Its offices had desks and cabinets and reams of paper forms. While pretending to be office workers had a short lifespan among me and my friends, the linoleum flooring and long halls made for great skating and perfect hopscotch layouts.

Playing school was about as unpopular as the rattlesnakes that we were convinced lived under every barracks. What the school offered instead was totally spectacular — a basketball court with a highly polished oak floor and baskets mounted at either end. None of my friends owned a basketball, but where there's a will, there's a way. We used any and every kind of ball we could find to "shoot hoops."

There was a swimming "hole" about a five-minute walk away at the other end of Goat Hill, one the adults claimed to be full of leeches. "You get in that water, Patty," daddy said, "and the bloodsuckers will be all over you."

I didn't get in the water, which looked like nothing but mud, anyway.

Some kids played tennis after a fashion on a concrete court behind our unit, between it and the main road. I say "after a fashion" since the concrete had developed cracks of various widths that invited twisted ankles and that sent balls spinning in unintended directions. Still, as an 8-year-old just off an Oregon farm, that court was heaven.

Not for tennis. We couldn't afford either rackets or balls, but for skating. Santa had given me a pair of skates of the kind you can only read about now. They were wheels on a frame, the frame fitting to the shoe, then clamped into place with a skate key.

(There's a bit of historic trivia for you.) Before we figured out how to jimmy a door and get into the Admin Building to skate those halls, that tennis court was just the thing.

Our first summer ended the day a long convoy of busses down-shifted, engines roaring, to climb the hill and pull onto what, I'm guessing, had been the War Authority's parade ground. One by one the growling, belching transports left the road to circle the field. They came to a stop — a great, long yellow snake come to carry us out of kid paradise.

Small firms benefiting from a growing and prosperous economy

The old saying that a rising tide lifts all boats rings true given today's growing economy.

The U.S. economy's historic boom benefits all Americans as job creation soars and wages rise. The economy outperformed expectations for the second year in a row in 2018. More than 2.6 million jobs were created last year, and the number of job openings surpassed the number of unemployed workers for the first time on record. The unemployment rate remained at or below 4 percent for the past 13 months — the longest streak in nearly five decades. The booming economy paid off for American workers last year, with nominal hourly wage growth exceeding 3 percent for the first time in almost a decade.

Since 2017, the Trump Administration has rolled back job-killing regulations to unleash an economic boom across all sectors of the economy. In 2018 alone, federal agencies issued 12 deregulatory actions for every new significant regulatory action, saving businesses $23 billion in regulatory costs.

During this tax filing season, it is important to remember that the Tax

DAN NORDBERG
Guest columnist

Cuts and Jobs Act signed into law by President Donald Trump has spurred additional business investment and put more money into the pockets of most American workers. Real disposable personal income increased by $2,300 from the end of 2017 to the fourth quarter of 2018. Business investment and productivity are on the rise thanks to the tax cuts, and capital expenditures are up $300 billion from 2017. One of the most powerful benefits of the tax law is the new 20 percent Qualified Business Income (Section 199A of the tax law) deduction for small firms and the self-employed. Section 199A allows owners of pass-through entities to deduct 20 percent of the business income that is passed on to their individual return.

The overall goal of all of these economic policies advanced by President Trump is to make sure that all small business owners are leveraging the tax cuts and deregulation efforts pushed forward since the start of his administration. Today, business owners are investing in their companies and their employees by raising wages, providing bonuses, and increasing benefits. I look forward to additional good economic news over the next several months and 2019 looks to be a banner year for small business growth in Colorado, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah and Wyoming. I am proud to represent the president in serving the small business communities across this region in the coming year.

Standing at the proposed site of a new Cody animal shelter, Park County Animal Shelter President Ken Markert addresses a group of project supporters Thursday morning. CODY ANIMAL SHELTER SEEKING $200,000 FOR NEW BUILDING

COUNTY CONTRIBUTES $10,000

BY CJ BAKER
Tribune Editor

Aiming to build a new, expanded facility, leaders of the Park County Animal Shelter in Cody have quietly raised more than $1.7 million, gathering money and pledges from more than 300 donors.

But to raise the final $200,000 they need for the roughly $1.9 million project, shelter leaders are now turning to the public for help.

"I call on everyone in Park County to help us make this new shelter into a reality," Park County Animal Shelter President Ken Markert said at a campaign kick-off event on Thursday, adding, "A nice shelter is a reflection of our community and the compassion we have for animals — and for people."

Donations of any size are welcome, he said.

Markert said the existing building — located off U.S. Highway 14/16/20 on Cody's eastern edge — isn't meeting the needs of the hundreds of dogs and cats that pass through it each year.

"We just don't have enough space to house the animals properly and it's badly deteriorating," he said.

Markert described it as noisy, cramped and difficult to clean, with a "totally inadequate" heating and cooling system, some rotting and mold in the dog area and no quarantine space.

Powell area animals go to the City of Powell/Moyer Animal Shelter, but the Park County Animal Shelter receives all the stray and surrendered animals from the rest of the county, including Cody and Meeteetse.

Last year, the Cody shelter took in 567 animals. Most were stray animals (448), with another 106 pets surrendered by their owners.

A total of 395 cats and dogs were adopted out, with 170 pets "redeemed" — i.e. lost pets that were reunited with their owners.

Like the Powell shelter, the Cody facility is a no-kill shelter, meaning they do not euthanize adoptable pets.

Both Cody Mayor Matt Hall and Dr. Lennox Baker, a donor to the project, spoke of the Cody shelter's importance at Thursday's kick-off event; it was held at the site of the proposed new facility — just east of the current one — on land that shelter officials are still working to acquire from City of Cody, in conjunction with the Yellowstone Regional Airport board and the Federal Aviation Administration.

"I'm looking forward to breaking ground sooner than later," said Hall, who made a $100 donation at the end of the event.

With the aid of a capital campaign committee, shelter leaders have raised more than $1.75 million so far — doing so about a year ahead of schedule.

Even after all that success, however, shelter leaders were pleasantly surprised when the Park County Commission agreed to contribute $10,000 earlier this month.

"Wow, thank you!" Markert exclaimed, when commissioners unanimously approved the request on April 2. "We did not expect this."

"Thank you, thank you, thank you," added Lani Snyder, who's helping raise funds for the new shelter building. "That's awesome."

The county provides about $10,500 to the Cody shelter each year to help with the nonprofit organization's ongoing operations, but the additional $10,000 will be earmarked for the new building.

"If it wasn't for these folks and the service that they do for the county, the county would probably have to pick up a large part of the stray animal tab in the county," Commissioner Joe Tilden said in moving to approve the funding, adding, "I think these folks do a great service to the county, saving us money and a lot of headaches."

The Park County Animal Shelter used to be known as the Humane Society of Park County, but leaders renamed the group in 2012 to make clear that they're completely unrelated to the Humane Society of the United States. The Humane Society of the U.S. opposes trophy hunting and has been involved in lawsuits aiming to preserve Endangered Species Act protections for grizzly bears and wolves. The national group has its detractors in this area.

Before voting to give the Cody shelter the extra funding, Commissioner Lloyd Thiel double-checked that the local group has no ties to the Humane Society of the U.S., saying he "just wanted to hear it again."

Markert said the Park County Animal Shelter has never taken a dime from the national group nor given them a penny.

"That's all I need to know," Thiel said. Markert told commissioners that shelter leaders "hope" to open their new building in late 2020.

"No," Snyder corrected. "We will."

TO DONATE:

Donations for the new Cody animal shelter can be mailed to PCAS Building Fund, P.O. Box 205, Cody, WY, 82414 or made online at www.parkcountyanimalshelter.org.

Thursday program at NWC covers Wyoming's eagles

On Thursday evening, Park Ranger Todd Johnson from Big-horn Canyon National Recreation Area and personnel from the Draper Museum Raptor Experience at the Buffalo Bill Center of the West will present, "Taking Flight: The Gripping Tales of Eagles in Wyoming."

The Powell Valley Community Education program begins at 6:30 p.m. in Fagerberg Building Room 70 at Northwest College.

Johnson will recount the harrowing story of the mass bald eagle shootings and poisonings that occurred in Wyoming in 1971. He will trace how the incidents led to a national outcry and the eventual banning of certain poisons in the United States.

Melissa Hill, assistant curator of the raptor experience, will follow Johnson's presentation by talking about the importance of eagles in Wyoming and showcasing Kateri, a golden eagle.

"I am so grateful to be working with Melissa and her team again on this important program," said Johnson. "Our talk will not only educate people on what took place in Wyoming, but more importantly, it will show how it led to important changes in national policy. Plus, people will get the chance to experience the majestic beauty of Kateri up close and personal."

"It's going to be a great night," he said.

New officer joins Powell PD

BY KEVIN KILLOUGH
Tribune News Editor

The Powell Police Department has filled one of two vacant patrol officer positions.

Kevin Bennett was sworn in before the Powell City Council earlier this month. He's originally from Cody but grew up in Billings.

Bennett served in the Army reserves, which is where he began to pursue his interest in law enforcement, working as a military police officer.

"It was always what I wanted to do," he said.

Bennett said he chose to pursue the opening in Powell because he enjoys the community.

"It's a good place to raise a family," he said.

Bennett has a 5-month-old boy and a 5-year-old girl.

The patrol position he's assuming initially opened in June, but it took some time to fill.

In the most recent hiring process, after administering written exams to selected applicants, the police department made conditional offers to Bennett and another candidate — hoping to fill another position that opened in December, said Chief Roy Eckerdt.

The candidates then proceeded with a psychiatric evaluation and background check, and both passed. A final interview process followed, but by that point, the second candidate had withdrawn.

Powell Mayor John Wetzel swears in Kevin Bennett to the Powell Police Department at the April 1 city council meeting. Bennett has 28 weeks of training before he starts solo patrols on the streets of Powell.

Bennett, however, passed the final interview process and a hiring board offered him the job.

Applications for the remaining open position are due by April 26, Eckerdt said.

There was a time the department would receive 50 to 75 applicants for positions, but the chief said they're getting eight to 10 applicants for open positions now.

It'll still be a few months before Bennett is on solo patrol. He has 14 weeks of field officer training, and then he goes to the Wyoming Law Enforcement Academy in Douglas for another 14 weeks.

Junior Rangers welcomed at Bighorn Canyon Saturday

To celebrate National Park Week and Junior Ranger Day, Bighorn Canyon National Recreation Area will host some special activities on Saturday.

Junior Rangers of all ages will be asked to visit several stations throughout the park as part of a National Park Day. The stations will run from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and have a variety of activities ranging from fishing, to geology, to art. At each station, participants will complete an activity and get a stamp in special booklets. After visiting each spot, participants will return to the Bighorn Canyon Visitor Center for their National Park Week Junior Ranger badge. Partners include Sunlight Sports, Wyoming Trout Guides, the Big Horn Basin Chapter of Walleyes Unlimited and volunteers.

"These programs are not as fun without all of them," said Bighorn Canyon Chief of Interpretation Christy Fleming.

Free webinars series focuses on gardening

A free webinar series through the University of Wyoming Extension focusing on gardening and growing food in a backyard started earlier this month and ends May 15.

Backyard Gardening in Wyoming classes will be noon to 1 p.m. each Wednesday. Horticulture and gardening experts from University of Wyoming Extension will present the various topics.

"Gardening in Wyoming is always challenging, particularly for those who move to Wyoming from other areas where it is easy to grow a garden," said Chris Hilgert, UW Extension horticulture specialist and state Master Gardener coordinator.

The webinars will be recorded and used to develop an online class series, he said.

The schedule is:

- April 17: "Build your Garden's Soil," by Caitlin Youngquist, UW Extension agriculture and horticulture educator. Youngquist will discuss how to improve soils to boost plant growth and productivity.

- April 24: "Vegetable Gardening," by Catherine Wissner, Laramie County UW Extension horticulturist. She will explain what to grow and how to grow it successfully.

- May 1: "Growing Small Fruits and Berries," by Chris Hilgert, UW Extension horticulture specialist. He will discuss strawberry and raspberry varieties suitable for Wyoming and production practices for reliable harvests.

- May 8: "Growing Fruit Trees," by Hilgert. He will discuss hardy varieties of apples, pears, cherries and peaches grown in Wyoming, as well as pruning techniques and pest management strategies that lead to greater harvests.

- May 15: "Growing Herbs," by Karen Panter, UW Extension horticulture specialist. Panter will discuss growing herbs in containers outdoors and indoors.

The webinars can be viewed at <https://uwyo.zoom.us/my/uwyo.mastergardener>.

Grant to fund NWC series on women's suffrage

The University of Wyoming's American Heritage Center (AHC) recently awarded a 2019 teaching and research grant to a Northwest College faculty member.

The AHC awarded funding to Amy McKinney, an associate professor in the NWC Department of History. Her grant will support a speaker series at the college this coming fall. The talks will focus on the 150th anniversary of women's suffrage in Wyoming. They will highlight specific Wyoming women — such as Mary Bellamy, the first woman to serve in the Wyoming Legislature — as well as themes addressing women's issues in Wyoming. The speaker series will culminate with a special celebration Dec. 10, the official anniversary date of suffrage in Wyoming.

"The AHC is proud to offer support to university and community college instructors throughout the state," says Ginny Kilander, reference services manager of the AHC. "These funds help facilitate research in AHC collections, which results in the knowledge being shared with broad Wyoming communities. It is always exciting to see the creative uses of the collections in the teaching curriculum, and we are happy to work with instructors and students in developing course content and research projects."

Two UW professors were also awarded grants this year.

Grants are awarded to implement research projects, course development and symposia that use AHC's resource material. Awards range from $200 to $3,000, depending on the scope and type of project.

INSURANCE

Most homeowners policies do not cover flooding

The Wyoming Department of Insurance (DOI) provides information to help you understand flood insurance and tips for what to do during a flood.

Spring runoff can result in considerable flooding in some parts of Wyoming. A number of communities in Wyoming and across the country are already experiencing flooding this season.

Flooding is the most frequent and expensive natural disaster in the U.S. Annually, floods cost our nation nearly approximately $8.2 billion. Yet, a 2018 poll found that only 15% of U.S. homeowners have flood insurance. The Wyoming Department of Insurance (DOI) offers this information to help you better understand flood insurance, your risk, and what to do in the event of a flood.

What is flood insurance?

The most important thing to understand about flood insurance is what it isn't. Flood damage is not typically covered through homeowners and renter's insurance policies. Flood insurance is a separate coverage you can purchase through a private insurer that offers coverage or through an agent or insurer participating in the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) which the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) manages.

Contact your insurance provider to learn more about flood insurance, to learn if your community participates in the NFIP or to get a quote. If your community doesn't participate in the NFIP, ask your licensed insurance agent about private flood insurance or refer you to another licensed agent who sells flood insurance. Shop around and compare coverage and premiums before you decide which policy to buy.

"It is important to note that the NFIP insurance policy doesn't go into effect immediately after you buy it," said Wyoming Insurance Commissioner Tom Glaue. "There is a 30-day waiting period unless a policy is bought at the same time as a new mortgage."

Why do I need flood insurance?

Determine your flood risk. The FEMA flood map service allows you to assess risk levels that are divided into three categories:

- High-risk areas have at least a 1% chance of flooding each year. Homeowners in these areas with mortgages from federally regulated or insured lenders are required to buy flood insurance.

- Moderate- to low-risk areas have less than a 1% chance of flooding each year, but there is still a possibility the area could flood. Flood coverage isn't required in these areas, but it is recommended.

Some mortgage lenders still require you to have flood insurance in non-high-risk areas.

- Undetermined risk areas are areas where flood-hazard analysis has yet to be conducted, but risk still exists.

It is important to note that approximately 20% of flood insurance claims come from outside of high-risk flood zones. Where it can rain, it can flood. If you experience flooding and have not purchased flood insurance, you might experience even greater financial issues.

What should I do in the event of a flood?

- Have a plan. Learn the evacuation routes in your community and designate a point of contact in another state in the event your family is separated. If you are staying in your home during a flood, go to the highest level of your home. If you are outdoors, move to higher ground and take shelter, if necessary.

- Prepare your home. Move items you want to protect to a higher floor and turn off your electricity.

- Store your insurance information in a safe place. Regularly update your homeowners or renters insurance and maintain a home inventory of your possessions. Keep track of records and receipts.

- Keep insurance agent and company contact information handy. Contact your insurer as soon as possible when it's safe. Your policy may require you to notify the company within a certain time frame.

- Take pictures of any property damage. Try to prevent further damage by cleaning and drying wet items.

- File a claim. Contact your insurance company whether it is for a homeowners, renters or auto insurance claim. Most insurance companies have toll-free numbers that are designed to handle new claims. If you need assistance finding a company contact, call the DOI at 1-800-438-5768 for assistance. Most insurance companies have a time requirement for reporting a claim, so contact your agent or company as soon as possible.

- Beware of fraud. Protect yourself by getting more than one bid from contractors and requesting references. Ask for proof of necessary licenses, building permits, insurance and bonding. Record the contractor's license plate and driver's license numbers and check for complaints with the Better Business Bureau (BBB).

Grouse: Hope is that helping the species rebound will stave off the birds' listing as an endangered species fragmented, translocations are going to become, in my estimation, much more common — whether to bolster populations in numbers or genetically,” said Dahlgren, a rangeland wildlife extension specialist and the country's leading expert on sage grouse translocations.

Translocation is an important new tool in efforts to increase the genetic viability of not only sage grouse, but many species. As habitat becomes fragmented by development, wildlife are becoming isolated in “islands” and genetically stagnant. Scientists hope this sage grouse translocation experiment — led by Dahlgren and wildlife officials in Wyoming and North Dakota officials, The Western Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies and the U.S. Geological Survey — will result in lessons applicable to other species as techniques are refined; Dahlgren is also working on grouse translocation projects in Utah, Nevada and California.

The work sounds simple enough — catch the birds and move them to a new location — but the efforts have been a five-year labor of love involving dozens of scientists, doctors and highly trained workers who are willing to work long hours — often in miserable conditions.

THE EXPERIMENT

At 9 p.m. on April 2, Schreiber began preparing for work at the Hampton Inn in Rawlins — her temporary home away from home for the duration of the captures.

The Game and Fish Department chose to capture grouse in the Rawlins area, core sage grouse habitat, because the populations are healthy there. But the weather wasn't cooperating.

With high winds blowing rain, sleet and snow into the sagebrush steppe, preparations were critical. You have to be warm and dry to concentrate on the work at hand and that requires a lot of layers. Bill Jensen, a large animal wildlife biologist from North Dakota was the first ready and waiting in the lobby of the hotel.

“There's no bad weather, just bad clothing,” he said.

One of the last items Schreiber put on was a headlamp. To safely catch sage grouse, you have to work in the dark of night. On this snowy night, catching them was going to require a miracle; Dahlgren had already warned the team that if captured birds came back wet and cold, he would postpone the efforts.

“I'm not going to risk a single bird,” he said.

Just getting to the nesting grounds outside Rawlins was a struggle. Deep snow drifts slowed all-terrain vehicles. Before the teams reached the birds, they were already wet and cold. They traveled in teams of two — one with a spotlight and one with a specially designed net. The spotlight illuminated the males, given away by their glowing green eyes and broad, white neck plumage. While the birds were blinded by the light, the team member with the net snuck up from behind, gently caught the grouse and secured them in a cardboard box. The material was a bad mix with the wet night. In the first three hours of effort, the teams managed to catch three grouse.

The birds were handed off to waiting teams and shuttled back to base camp. Wildlife veterinarians anesthetized the grouse as they arrived (to reduce stress during handling), then carefully inspected, banded and tested them; only two of the first three birds brought in were healthy enough to be approved by Game and Fish Wildlife Veterinarian Mary Wood as candidates for translocation. Those two were fitted with radio transmitters for future studies. Meanwhile, Dahlgren halted the capture effort due to the worsening weather.

Teams waited in their trucks for the conditions to change, some grabbing naps. At about 3:30 a.m., there was a break in the precipitation and teams once again mounted up.

Chris Queen, Powell area game warden for the Wyoming Game and Fish Department, counts sage grouse on an isolated lek in Elk Basin.

By 7:30 a.m., the teams had caught and processed nine grouse and headed back to Rawlins for a nap. A crew from North Dakota was standing by with a truck. They shuttled the first load of grouse to the northeast, releasing them the next morning in western North Dakota, near the Montana border.

The following day in Rawlins, the routine was the same, but the weather improved. The scientists captured and processed 11 more roosters, then another crew drove the males to North Dakota for release.

The teams will reassemble later this spring — after nests hatch — to capture 10 females without active broods and 10 with their chicks. Keeping the broods together with their mothers is an important part of the experiment, Dahlgren has found.

“It has really helped us get past the big risks we have taken with translocations,” he said.

But it's all an experiment at this stage, Schreiber said, and determining success is a long process. Teams of scientists will be staying at both capture and release locations through the summer. They'll check to make sure the populations in Wyoming aren't being adversely affected by the captures — and that augmentation is working in the birds' new homes in North Dakota.

While researchers hope it will be a five-year project, Wyoming is approving the work on a year-by-year basis.

“We want to have a better feel of the impacts to Wyoming birds before we agree to the whole five years,” Schreiber said. The project is now in year three and preliminary USGS data shows little to no adverse effects on Wyoming's source population and small successes in North Dakota, Dahlgren said.

“Things look good right now,” he said. “But my translocation experience with grouse is you don't really start to see a good response until the fourth year of efforts. That's when things really start to take off.”

Each new attempt gives crews from the 11 western states with sage grouse habitat clues on how to better translocate grouse and augment or diversify populations.

“What we learn about translocating sage grouse will be shared with those other states,” Schreiber said. “It's an important tool we're developing.”

Leslie Schreiber fights through a snow drift in inclement weather to deliver a captured sage grouse, which was caught near Rawlins earlier this month.

A DOWNWARD TREND

State and federal officials share the task of visiting known leks and reporting sage grouse numbers in Wyoming — and help comes from many sources. Powell Game Warden Chris Queen covers five to six leks, counting the males and females participating in intricate spring mating rituals.

“The data is important, but I have to combine the route with other duties,” Queen said while bouncing his green department F-250 down a soggy road. “Our jobs are a third law enforcement, a third wildlife management and a third whatever is asked of us.”

As he rolled up to one of his stops in Elk Basin, north of Powell, Queen hopped out with his spotting scope. He hot-footed it through the sand and sagebrush to a high point on a hill, a half-mile from the truck. There, through the powerful scope, the warden could watch the lek without disrupting the grouse's dance.

“There are 22 roosters and four hens,” Queen said while perched near a lichen-covered outcropping, adding, “I hope there are more later in this season — closer to the peak.”

Sage grouse production in Wyoming has been on a downward trend for the past few years, dropping from a 10-year high of 1.8 chicks per hen in 2014 to 0.83 last year. The average needed to maintain the current population is 1.2 chicks per hen, Schreiber said, and a growing population has 1.5 chicks per hen. Sage grouse are known to be cyclical, having bad years and good years depending on factors like weather and habitat quality.

Grouse populations have sunk from an estimated 16 million birds to about 400,000 across the West. As part of the effort to reverse declining populations, research teams even spent two years experimenting with artificial insemination — an extremely difficult task.

The hope is that helping the species rebound will stave off the birds' listing as an endangered species — as well as saving the important species. A listing could slow mineral exploration and extraction, land leases and agriculture while costing western states revenue.

More immediately, if the North Dakota sage grouse range should contract by 30 miles, it could result in losing populations in both Dakotas, said Jesse Kolar, upland game management supervisor for the North Dakota Game and Fish Department.

“State boundary seems like an arbitrary line, but each state has funds to spend,” Kolar said. “If two states lose those funds, it has practical consequences for sage grouse.”

The Dakotas may be the edge of the range, but having sage grouse survive there benefits all states with the species, Dahlgren said.

“If we keep seeing extirpations, there's a higher likelihood of a federal listing and all the economic ramifications of that to western states,” he said. “And Wyoming stands to lose the most.”

As the need for translocations continues or possibly increases, scientists will most likely continue to look to Wyoming for wild birds, as almost 40 percent of the country's greater sage grouse live here.

“Wyoming,” Dahlgren said, “is sage grouse core.”

Wyoming Game and Fish wildlife veterinarian Mary Wood and North Dakota Game and Fish wildlife veterinarian Charlie Bahnson perform tests on a sage grouse in a remote trailer, while Wyoming Sage Grouse Program Coordinator Leslie Schreiber studies the process.

West Rawlins Game Warden John Pokallus releases a male sage grouse after it was determined to be too thin to be relocated to North Dakota.

PHS TRACK TEAMS DOMINATE LOVELL

PANTHERS, LADY PANTHERS TAKE HOME TEAM TITLES

BY DON COGGER
Tribune Sports Editor

Despite battling State FFA, the North Big Horn Music Festival, ACT testing and the prom for the attention of its athletes, the Powell High School track and field teams managed to pull off some impressive performances Saturday at the Lovell Invitational.

The Panthers and the Lady Panthers both took home team titles. The boys sprinted to 255 points, easily outdistancing runners-up Lovell with 71 points. On the girls' side, the Lady Panthers finished with 171 points, ahead of Lovell's 97 points and Meeteetse's 69.

"This meet is always a tough one, with so much going on," said PHS head coach Scott Smith. "But it was a nice day. We had some good performances and the kids had fun. It's a smaller meet, and we had some new kids scoring points and working towards getting letters across the board."

The two Powell teams combined to win 15 events, highlighted by Brody Karhu clearing 14 feet, 1 inch in the pole vault, unofficially the best vault in the state in all classes this season. Karhu also finished second in the 400 meter dash.

"He [Karhu] made it on his first attempt," Smith said of the vault. "He hits the pit and he looks up and the bar is still there. So he does a back flip to celebrate."

Karhu was game to try for another height, but with a running event looming, Karhu and coach Smith decided to quit while he was ahead.

"The 400 was coming up, and he gave me a look like, 'What do I do next, coach?'" Smith said. "I told him, 'Let's end it as a good day, not on a miss.'"

Lady Panther Jenna Hillman, who missed the last two meets due to illness, showed a strong return to form Saturday, winning the 200 and 400 meter dash and finishing second in the 100 meters. The talented freshman is expected to be an important point-getter as the season reaches its halfway point.

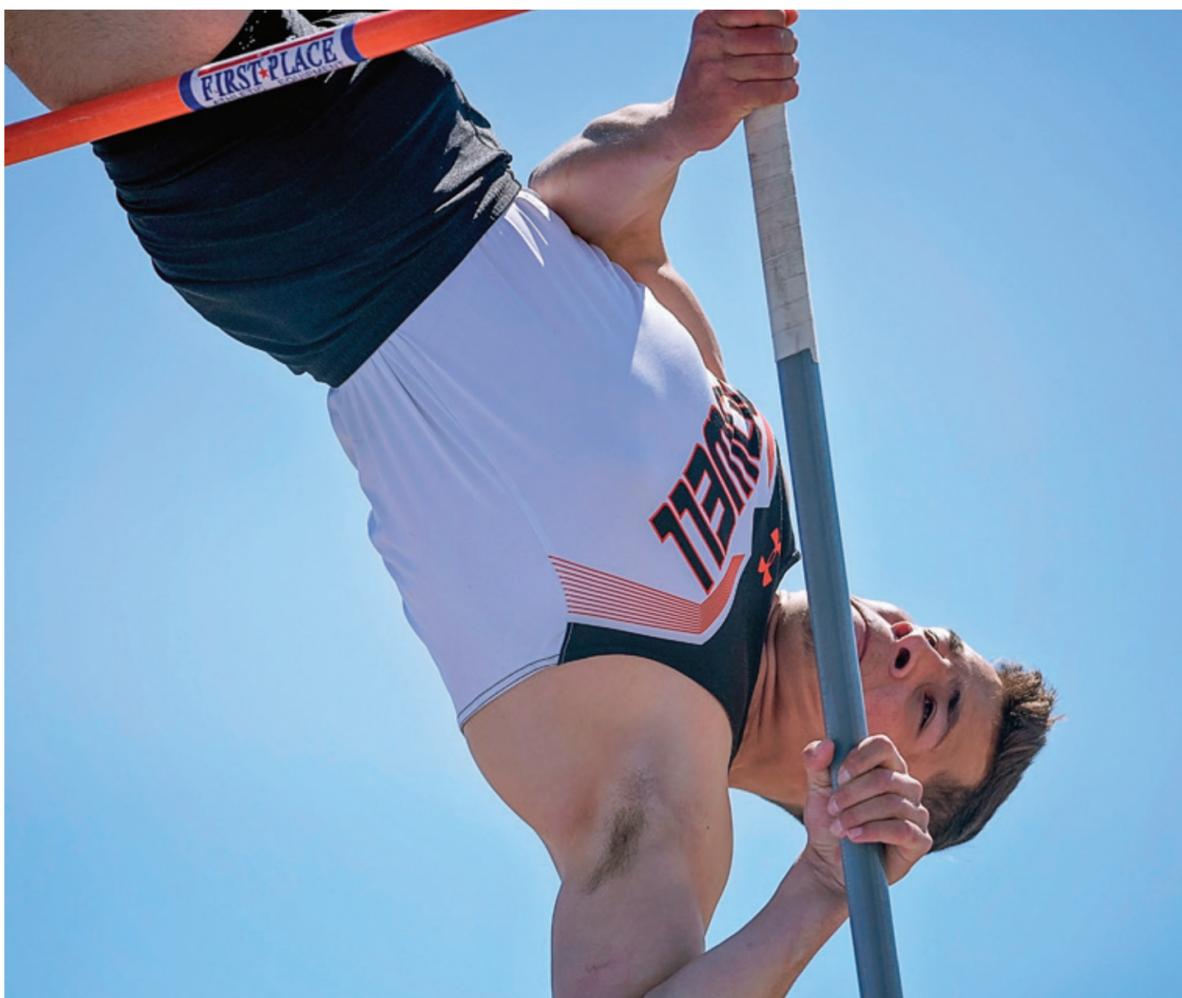

"Jenna Hillman had a really good day," Smith said, adding, "After being as sick as she was, it was good to see her starting to come back, especially in the 400."

Up next for the PHS track teams is an invitational Thursday in Laurel, Montana. Smith said he expects to have a full team making the trip, barring any unforeseen illnesses or circumstances.

"There are four or five facilities in the state of Montana that they run state track meets at, and Laurel is one of them," he said. "It's a good facility, so that should be kind of fun. It's a 10-lane track, so that will freak some kids out. It's an unlimited entry invite, so we'll take as many kids as can go."

At right, with a look of determination, PHS thrower Reagan Thompson prepares to launch the shot Saturday at the Lovell Invitational. hurdles Saturday, winning the 100 meter hurdles in a time of 17.17. Her meet was cut short before she could run the 300 meter hurdles, however, due to more pressing concerns.

"Well, there's this thing called prom," Smith said, chuckling. "We had an awful lot of that actually. Kids have hair appointments, and there's only so many people in town who do hair.

It's one of the reasons we go to Lovell on this weekend, so that kids can still go to part of the meet and be able to participate in their other events, like FFA and the district music festival."

Other winners on the girls' side included Emma Karhu in the pole vault, clearing a height of 9 feet, 3 inches; she also finished second in the 200 meter dash, less than a second behind teammate Hillman. Karhu's vault also prequalified the sophomore for state.

Cassidy Miner won the shot put with a toss of 33 feet, 1 inch, adding a third-place finish in the discus to finish out her day.

Caitlyn Miner had a solid day on the track, placing second in the 100 meter hurdles and third in the 100 meter dash. Hailee Hyde and Hailee Paul notched second-place finishes in the 800 meter and 1600 meter runs, respectively. Hyde also placed third in the high jump.

"Hailee Hyde in the 800 dropped her time by almost 10 seconds; Hailee Paul improved her best mile [1600] time this year by almost 15 or 20 seconds," Smith said. "It's nice to see those distance kids do well. They work awfully hard, so it's nice to see that work pay off."

In the field events, Gabri Lundberg placed second in the high jump with a height of 4 feet, 8 inches. Maddie Hackenberg was second in the pole vault, while Elsie Spomer was third in the triple jump. Spomer was also the top Lady Panther in the long jump, finishing seventh.

Regan Thompson was third in the shot put with a toss of 28 feet, 7.5 inches, while Hannah Saville finished fourth in the discus, with a throw of 82 feet, 6 inches.

PANTHERS

On the boys' side, Dylan Preator continued to shine in the hurdles, winning both the 110 and 300 meter hurdles. The junior also won the triple jump with a distance of 40 feet, 10.5 inches, and finished second in the long jump with a jump of 20 feet.

Jay Cox and Alan Merritt got it done on the track, winning the 400 meters and the 3200 meters, respectively. Merritt also finished second in the 1600 meters. Smith said the battle between Cox, teammate Brody Karhu and Rocky Mountain's Skyler Drewes in the 400 meters was one to remember.

"Brody and Jay Cox ran an incredible 400," he said. "To see those two running that fast this time of year is pretty encouraging. Skyler Drewes from Rocky Mountain is a talented kid, and he kind of played the rabbit for Jay and Brody. They passed him on the straightaway, but he stayed in the race. It was good to have that kind of quality running against each other."

Merritt's time in the 2-mile beat his previous best time by almost 30 seconds.

"He [Merritt] was pretty much by himself out there," Smith said. "He also dropped about six seconds off his best mile time, as well. I'm just really pleased with the improvements made by all of our distance runners."

Champions in the field events included Colby Warner in the high jump with a height of 6 feet, 2 inches. Ryan Good won the discus with a toss of 148 feet, 9 inches, a state prequalifying mark, as well as a personal best. He also finished second in the shot put.

In sprints, Kaelan Groves was second in the 100 meters, while Riley Bennett finished third in the 200 meters. Isaac Summers was runner-up in the 800 meter run with a time of 2:17.05 — dropping 10 seconds off of his previous best. Tyler Pfeiffer finished second in the 3200 meters in a time of 10:59.47.

In only his second meet since an injury last year, Aidan Jacobsen had a solid showing in the mile, finishing fourth with a time of 5:06.92.

"It was a good meet for him [Jacobsen] just coming back," Smith said. "It's good to see him running for the first time in two years."

CUB SEVENTH GRADERS WIN TEAM TITLE

BY DON COGGER
Tribune Sports Editor

The Powell Middle School track and field teams hosted the Roundtable Invitational on Saturday at Panther Stadium, with the Cubs' seventh grade team winning the title in the five-team field.

The Cub seventh graders scored 148 points, with Cody in second with 133 points and Riverton rounding out the top three with 101 points.

The eighth grade girls' and boys' teams finished second to Cody, while the seventh grade girls finished third behind Cody and Worland.

LADY CUBS

Grace Coombs and Kami Jensen led the charge for the eighth grade girls, winning three individual events apiece; the pair also ran legs on the winning 4x200 relay team with teammates Sydney Spomer and Blake Nissen.

Coombs once again finished in the top spot in the shot put — with a toss of 26 feet, 11 inches — and the discus, with a throw of 99 feet, 3 inches; she also finished first in the 400 meter dash. Jensen was first in the 100 meter and 200 meter hurdles, and also won the pole vault, clearing a height of 7 feet.

Sydney Spomer had a first-place finish in the triple jump, to go along with a bronze in the long jump.

For the seventh graders, Waycee Harvey won the 100 and 200 meter dashes, as well as the long jump, with a leap of 13 feet, 2 inches. K. Black won the 1600 meter run, while the relay team of Cassidy Reimer, Amiya DeFoe-Love, Gracie Wolff and Waycee Harvey won the 4x400 meters with a time of 4:58.46.

CUBS

The seventh grade Cubs won five events en route to taking the team title, led by a pair of first-place finishes by Stuart Shoopman in the 100 and 200 meter hurdles. Marshall Lewis also won a pair of field events, taking the top spot in the high jump and long jump, while finishing second in the 800 meter run.

Adam Williams won the pole vault, clearing a height of 8 feet, 6 inches for a personal best. Williams was also the top Cub placer in the 200 meter dash, finishing fourth. Seston Shoopman was the top Cub finisher in the 100 meter dash with a second-place finish; he also finished second in the shot put. Tevon Schultz was third in the triple jump with a distance of 27 feet. Wyatt Blackmore was fifth in the discus with a throw of 70 feet, 11 inches.

On the boys' eighth grade side, Jace Hyde took the top spot in the 400 meter dash and placed second in both the 200 meter hurdles and
