PROSECUTOR DISMISSES SEXUAL ASSAULT CHARGE AGAINST CODY NURSE

BY CJ BAKER
Tribune Editor

After learning that key witnesses made inconsistent statements, prosecutors have dropped all charges against a Cody nurse, who was alleged to have sexually assaulted an unconscious patient in 2015.

"The decision wasn't made lightly," said Park County Prosecuting Attorney Bryan Skoric, "... but it was the only ethical thing for me to do."

At Skoric's request, District Court Judge Bill Simpson dismissed the case on May 10. It means that, after more than four years, Robert Guty is in the clear, because the case was dismissed with prejudice, he will never have to face the allegations again.

Guty, 48, denied any wrongdoing, saying that the alleged assault never happened. He and his defense attorney, Ian Sandefer, declined to comment for this story.

A fellow nurse at the Northern Wyoming Surgical Center in Cody accused Guty of the crime in early 2015. She reported seeing Guty's fingers inside a female patient's genitalia while the woman was under general anesthesia and being prepped for a foot procedure. None of the other medical personnel who were in the surgical room that day saw anything suspicious. However, the report was bolstered by four other staffers at the Cody center, who said they had long suspected Guty had been inappropriately touching patients.

'The State no longer has a prosecutable case based upon these inconsistent statements.'

Bryan Skoric
Prosecuting attorney

Guty was fired from the Northwest Wyoming Surgical Center after an internal investigation and authorities charged him with first-degree sexual assault in February 2015.

The case was set to go to trial in July, but Skoric moved to dismiss the felony charge this month. The prosecutor said he recently learned that witnesses he planned to call had given "completely different" statements about the events in question.

"The State no longer has a prosecutable case based upon these inconsistent statements," Skoric wrote in his motion.

At issue are apparently two sets of statements that Northern Wyoming Surgical Center workers made about their observations and interactions with Guty: accounts they gave to law enforcement in early 2015 and sworn testimony they later gave in a civil suit that the patient brought against the surgical center.

When he reviewed the depositions from the civil case this month, Skoric said he found

Western meadowlark vs. sage grouse

BATTLE ROYALE BREWING IN BIRDING WORLD FOR THE STATE'S TOP FEATHERED SPOT

BY MARK DAVIS
Tribune Staff Writer

Zach Hutchinson has nothing against the western meadowlark, which is probably a good thing. The species is the official Wyoming state bird and popular with most residents in its range.

However, Hutchinson thinks there's a better choice for the state's designated top spot: the sage grouse.

Consider the facts: The western meadowlark is a pretty bird with a lovely, distinctive song. Many have fallen for the bird without even stopping their car — it's one of the few birds you can hear while driving through the state at 70 mph with your windows down. And as a bonus, its plumage is highlighted by a pleasant yellow.

But Hutchinson — the founder of the birding website Flocking Around and perhaps the state's most influential birder — points out that only 6 percent of the western meadowlark population makes its home in Wyoming. And they're only here during fair weather. Further, the meadowlark is claimed as the official bird in six different states: Montana,

Cody man knocks down Powell traffic light

BY CJ BAKER
Tribune Editor

A Cody man who crashed into a downtown light pole late Thursday night said he swerved to miss a deer; Powell police, however, say he was drunk.

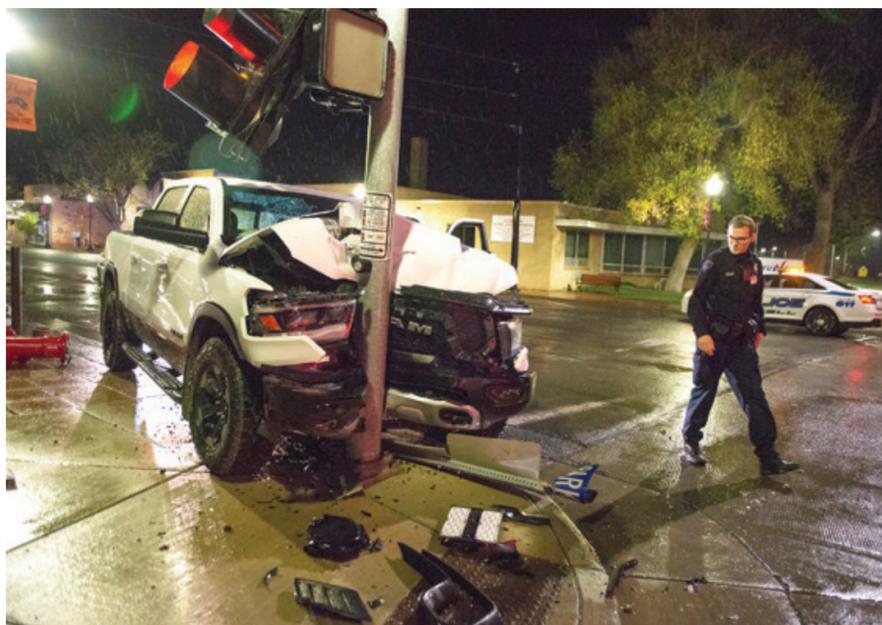

The crash occurred shortly before midnight on South Bent Street, near its intersection with Park Street and Coulter Avenue.

When Powell Police Officer Braden Hancock arrived on scene, driver Thomas M. Thompson, explained that he'd been shaken up, but was OK. According to the officer, the 36-year-old was also slurring his speech, stumbling and smelled like alcohol.

"... I asked Thompson how he ended up hitting the pole [and] he stated there was a deer and he swerved to avoid hitting it," Hancock recounted in a court filing. However, "it did not appear that Thompson had attempted to brake or had swerved," the officer wrote, noting that Thompson's truck had "struck a fire hydrant, breaking it [off] its base, run over a sign and hit the light pole with enough force to knock the traffic signal off."

Thompson reportedly told an EMT that he'd been driving south at about 37 miles

Resident complains to council about neighbors' fires

BY KEVIN KILLOUGH
Tribune News Editor

A Powell resident fed up with smoke from her neighbors' fire pit and receptacles brought her complaints to the City Council Monday in hope of a solution.

Linda Johnson built her house on North Gilbert Street over a decade ago. She said she had no problems with smoke from her neighbors' yard until last year. Her neighbors, who she said rent the house next to hers, moved in and regularly burn items in a fire pit and receptacles. The smoke permeates her home, she said.

Johnson explained she suffers from mesothelioma, a rare cancerous condition that affects the lining of the lungs. It's caused by the inhalation of asbestos fibers and is incurable.

"I feel helpless," she said. Johnson said she spoke with her neighbors, but their response was to say the burning was "convenient."

"Well, it's not convenient for me," she told the council.

Johnson argued she had a right to live in her home

Pinedale man survives 500-foot drop in car

PINEDALE (WNE) — A Pinedale man survived a 500-foot drop when his car went over a cliff above Fremont Lake, but spent a cold night before contacting rescuers.

Lucas Corwin, 25, of Pinedale, called for help around 10:45 a.m. Tuesday, setting off a search by law enforcement agencies, firefighters and personnel from Bridger-Teton National Forest.

Corwin was able to give his approximate location and law enforcement officers started walking along Skyline Drive, north of White Pine Ski Resort's access road.

The crash site was not visible from the road, said Sublette County Sheriff K.C.; Lehr authorities found Corwin when they heard him shouting for help.

The crash occurred before dark Monday night. According to Wyoming Highway Patrol Trooper Brandon Deckert, the Pontiac G6 "vaulted" almost 100 feet before hitting a rock shelf. The vehicle then cartwheeled end-over-end another 300 or 400 feet down the embankment.

Corwin was not wearing a seatbelt and was ejected from the vehicle in the fall. Despite injuries to his back, Corwin managed to get into the crashed Pontiac, where he remained until Tuesday morning. According to the National Weather Service, temperatures fell to 21 degrees Fahrenheit during the night.

Deckert said the cause of the crash was "intentional." No alcohol or drugs are suspected in the crash and no citations were issued.

Nurse: Patient has said the incident has caused pain and trauma that she expects to last the rest of her life statements that were "substantially and materially inconsistent" with what the witnesses had told Cody police.

Skoric would not elaborate on which witnesses contradicted themselves or what parts of their stories had changed, noting that the civil case and the depositions have been placed under seal.

The timing of the prosecutor's court filings indicates that the nurse who reported the sexual assault remained consistent in saying that she witnessed Guty sexually touch the patient in the surgical room. However, Skoric indicated that she and other surgical center personnel were inconsistent about other parts of the case.

"I had no credible witnesses to move forward with," Skoric said.

The eyewitness and the four other workers all told law enforcement that they had seen Guty's hands in inappropriate places going back as far as two years earlier.

One scrub technician told Cody police she'd seen Guty's hands in inappropriate places approximately 20 times; another scrub tech said she'd started keeping a journal of what she saw and heard from others; another nurse told police that, when she underwent a procedure at the surgical center, she wore extra clothing because of her concern with Guty; yet another nurse said that she'd logged incidents involving Guty in a calendar, writing down dates when she observed or heard from coworkers that Guty had placed his hands under the blankets with female patients.

The entire case wound up hinging on those statements and, Skoric indicated, some parts proved to be inconsistent.

Prosecutors wanted to introduce the women's suspicions as evidence, to explain why the nurse decided to look under the blanket for Guty's hand during the January 2015 procedure.

"[The nurse] told me that they have assumed inappropriate touching by Robert Guty, but this is the first time it has been witnessed," Cody Police Lt. Jason Stafford wrote in court records.

However, Guty's defense attorney, Ian Sandefer of Casper, argued the women's suspicions should be excluded; he said the unproven accusations would unfairly prejudice the jury against Guty.

"The heart of this case is really whether it's ever acceptable for the state to seek the conviction of a criminal defendant based on speculations, assumptions, innuendo and gossip," Sandefer said at a hearing last year.

Then-District Court Judge Steven Cranfill ruled in 2017 that he would allow testimony about the women's suspicions, which led to a plea deal.

Guty agreed to conditionally plead "no contest" to a reduced count of third-degree sexual assault — with the condition being that he could appeal Cranfill's evidentiary ruling to the Wyoming Supreme Court.

If the Supreme Court agreed with Cranfill and ruled that the testimony about the women's suspicions was admissible, Guty would serve a year in jail and four years of supervised probation; if the court reversed Cranfill's decision and blocked the evidence, Skoric would likely drop the case.

However, the Supreme Court ultimately declined to rule on the issue, sending the case back to district court for a trial.

In the meantime, the patient sued Northwest Wyoming Surgical Center (NWSC) over the alleged sexual assault. Given the reports that center staff had long believed Guty was inappropriately touching patients, she accused the center of negligence and negligent infliction of emotional distress.

"NWSC, its administration, staff and Board of Directors knew, or should have known, of the danger posed to female surgical patients by the offending nurse employee," said a portion of the complaint, referring to Guty.

The surgical center denied any wrongdoing in its initial response to the suit. Then, about six months after it had been filed, Judge Simpson sealed the case at the patient's request; in a December 2017 order, Simpson said the civil case was "of such a nature that confidentiality outweighs public disclosure."

At a sentencing hearing in Guty's criminal case just a couple months earlier, the patient spoke of not wanting to be publicly identified.

"I live in fear that a new article comes out and the entire town will know that it was me who was the patient that was raped by nurse Guty at the Northern Wyoming Surgical Center," the woman had told Judge Simpson.

Before the civil case reached a confidential settlement, the attorneys took sworn testimony from the center staffers who had made the reports about Guty.

In October, Skoric asked for access to those depositions and other statements the witnesses had made.

Judge Simpson agreed in December, but prohibited Skoric and Sandefer from making any copies or distributing the information in any way.

That slowed down the process, with Skoric only reviewing the depositions in detail earlier this month; that's when he said he realized the nurses' testimonies were "remarkably different" than what they told Cody police.

Even before that, however, the prosecution had issues to overcome at trial.

Defense attorneys had questioned the motives of the staff making the accusations against Guty — and emphasized the fact that, in a room full of several people, only one nurse reported seeing anything untoward.

Further, a psychosexual evaluation conducted at the request of the Wyoming State Board of Nursing questioned whether Guty had assaulted the patient.

In a February 2015 evaluation, Dr. Amanda Turlington of Sheridan found "no evidence that [Guty] poses any harm toward patients" and said "there appears to be no solid reason to substantiate the allegations against [Guty]," according to an order from the nursing board.

As for the patient, she was under general anesthesia at the time of the alleged assault and has no memory of what did or didn't happen.

At a 2017 hearing, she spoke of the impact the incident has had on her life.

"This horrible act and this violation of my trust has forever changed my life and that of my family," she said. Aside from close family members, "I can no longer trust anyone," she said, adding that she expected to feel pain and trauma for the rest of her life.

Skoric said he spoke with the woman's family before dismissing the case; he called the situation "a tough one."

Asked whether he believes a crime was committed, the prosecutor said it's not an issue of what he believes.

"It's a matter of what we could go in and prove to a jury," Skoric said, "and I had no proof left."

When the criminal case was pending, Guty voluntarily agreed not to practice nursing. His license expired at the end of 2018.

'It's a matter of what we could go in and prove to a jury!'

FCC commissioner attending town hall at Northwest College

A member of the Federal Communication Commission will be visiting Powell on Thursday.

Commissioner Brendan Carr is set to appear at a 9:30 a.m. town hall event at Northwest College, in Room 70 of the Fagerberg Building.

Carr is visiting both Wyoming and Montana this week to learn more about rural broadband, workforce development and other needs particular to this area, his office said. The commissioner has attended town halls and events in nearly 30 states over the past two years, hitting the road roughly once a month.

Carr says he's leading an FCC initiative on telehealth and its work to modernize the rules that govern the buildup of telecommunications infrastructure, including 5G networks.

Carr said he's also focused "on expanding America's skilled workforce — the tower climbers and construction crews needed to build next-gen networks," leading a workforce initiative that "promotes community colleges, technical schools, and apprenticeships as a pipeline for good-paying 5G jobs."

A lawyer by trade, Carr first joined the FCC as a staffer in 2012, being named to the commission by President Donald Trump in 2017. His current term runs through 2023.

Torrington council tables chicken ordinance

TORRINGTON (WNE) — After two public comment sessions full of spirited debate both for and against an ordinance that would allow Torrington residents to have up to four laying hens within city limits, the Torrington City Council voted 3-2 to table the issue Tuesday night.

The urban chicken motion had passed on its first and second reading, but was tabled — or set aside — before a third and final reading.

Councilwoman Deanna Hill said she thought it would be appropriate to table the ordinance to allow the council to hear from other towns in Wyoming that have approved such an ordinance.

Councilman Matt Mattis, who introduced the urban chicken movement, said tabling the urban chicken ordinance was in the council's best interest. He noted "a lot of opposition" to the proposal.

"I think we need to do our due diligence to get more info from other cities that have proposed this," he said. "The best service we can do for our citizens is to make a better decision based on other cities and towns and the trials and tribulations they've had."

Bird: Gov. Mark Gordon supports grouse as state bird

Nebraska, North Dakota, Kansas, Oregon and Wyoming.

"Do we really want to share anything with a state like Kansas? KANSAS?! No, I say!" said Hutchinson. "Wyoming, unlike those other 'meh' states, is unique. We deserve our very own bird."

In contrast with the meadowlark, roughly 40 percent of all sage grouse live in Wyoming. They're here year-round, in all their rough-and-tumble spirit, enduring the Cowboy State's weather through thick and thin.

Some have described sage grouse as exotic-looking; others describe them as obscene. Most are photographed during the mating season, when the males' great lung sacks are filled with air, displayed and deflated in an attempt to attract a mate. Their flight is anything but graceful, spending much of their time with their thick, hardscrabble-navigating feet (claws) on the ground. They nest on the ground, feed on the ground and typically stay motionless on the ground when threatened from above.

It doesn't take a lot of imagination to love a colorful meadowlark. It's easier to admire the plump and camouflage-colored sage grouse when considering their tough, determined nature rather than their good looks.

The idea of making the grouse the Wyoming state bird has some strong backing. Gov. Mark Gordon has gone on the record supporting the swap.

"It's a good concept," Gordon said. "I'm not the one to advance that, but I think, yeah, I wouldn't mind the change. It's a really interesting proposal."

It reminds Gordon of the long-rumored discussion Ben Franklin had with George Washington about selecting the national bird. Franklin thought the wild turkey should represent the country, while Washington was a proponent of the American bald eagle. Contrary to legend, there's no evidence that Franklin protested to Congress about the choice of the bald eagle and lobbied for the turkey. However, in a 1784 letter to his daughter, he did label the bald eagle "a bird of bad moral character," according to historian Elizabeth Nix.

In her 2018 article, "How did the bald eagle become America's national bird?" Nix noted important historical facts about the bald eagle (which most think is a fine national symbol) that could apply to the sage grouse.

"Despite its symbolic significance, America's majestic national bird has faced a real-life threat of extinction," she wrote, referring to habitat destruction, hunting and poisoning from DDT that dropped put the population in danger. However, thanks to conservation efforts, the eagle population has since been restored.

The sage grouse population, too, has and still faces serious challenges from loss of habitat and other threats. But the challenges are not insurmountable and efforts are underway to protect the bird. Despite Benjamin Franklin's misgivings, it was devotion and admiration for the bald eagle that helped save the beloved national symbol.

Powell's wild game bird expert Karl Bear loves the sage grouse and has long thought it should be the state's feathered symbol.

"I had that idea years ago," he said.

But to get the legislative push needed to make a change, it's going to take more than admiration: Someone in the statehouse has to propose a change.

You can count state Rep. Dan Laursen, R-Powell out. He said he wouldn't bring the bill or even co-sponsor it.

Laursen cast the single vote against making the tiger salamander the official state amphibian last winter, saying he didn't believe it was a needed bill.

"I caught heck about that," he said.

Laursen did say he would enjoy hearing the debate about the state's official bird. The lawmaker said he likes the western meadowlark, but doesn't like that five other states share the species.

"I don't know if I'd be against it, but I wouldn't be all that excited to vote for it," he said of any effort to make the grouse Wyoming's bird. "It's not important to me, that's for sure."

One would assume Game and Fish sage grouse program manager Leslie Schreiber would be a strong proponent in the grouse corner, but she refused to take shots at the meadowlark. Instead she chose to sing the praises of the sage grouse.

"Sage grouse are in that category with pronghorn and all the other critters that stay here year-round. They are resourceful and able to endure the weather we experience in this state," Schreiber said. "We'd be unique; I'm all for it."

Sportsmen and women might also be on board, as you can legally eat a Wyoming grouse during the state's hunting season.

Big Horn Ankle and Foot

A Persisting Fungus

If a sunny summer day usually finds you in a swimming pool or on a tennis court, beware. You are a prime candidate for athlete's foot.

You don't have to be an athlete to pick up the fungus, which commonly causes an itching and burning sensation between the toes.

Known as "athlete's foot" because it is often acquired in locker rooms or other dark and wet floors, the fungus can be doggedly persistent and will spread to other parts of the body.

It's important to see a podiatrist if dry, itchy, inflamed or blistered skin continues more than two weeks, because it gets harder to cure the longer it lasts. It might also be a more serious problem like eczema or psoriasis, which show similar symptoms.

Scratching may make the itching feel better, but it may also spread the fungus to other parts of the body, especially the groin and underarm areas.

Good hygiene is the best way to avoid athlete's foot. Wash your feet with soap and water and dry them every day, especially after playing sports or swimming. You should change your shoes and socks frequently, and use foot powder everyday. Walking barefoot may tickle your toes, but it's an easy way to catch athlete's foot.

an hour before he crashed — above the 25 mph speed limit.

Meanwhile, Powell Police Sgt. Paul Sapp searched for signs of a deer in the downtown area, but found nothing.

Official results from a blood test are pending, but a preliminary portable breath test put Thompson's blood alcohol content at 0.167 percent — more than twice the legal limit for driving, Hancock's affidavit says. Thompson also reportedly failed sobriety tests.

He was arrested at the scene and charged with misdemeanor counts of driving while under the influence of alcohol and careless driving.

Thompson pleaded not guilty to the allegations at a Friday morning appearance in Park County Circuit Court and was released from jail after posting $2,500.

A trial is tentatively set for Sept. 5.

Smoke: Council agrees to research issue for solutions without an intrusion from her neighbors' smoke. Besides being unpleasant, it impacts her health, she said; she also pointed out that breathing smoke is associated with other health conditions.

Johnson contacted the Powell Police Department to complain, but they told her there wasn't much they can do, as there's no law against having a recreational fire at a resident's home.

The city does have an ordinance prohibiting the burning of solid waste and "other material" inside city limits, if it creates "obnoxious or foul odors" or endangers property. However, the council and police don't think this applies to Johnson's concerns about her neighbors' fires.

Prior to the meeting, Powell Police Chief Roy Eckerdt told City Administrator Zane Logan that officers drove past the house in unmarked cars, but never saw anyone breaking any laws; Johnson claimed her neighbors cover their receptacles when cars came down the street, so officers don't see anything.

Logan said he's never received any complaints from other residents about neighbors burning in their yards, nor had any councilors heard similar complaints from any of their constituents.

Councilor Scott Mangold asked if Johnson would be bothered by people grilling with charcoal or propane. Johnson said she had no problem with that.

Councilor Steven Lensegrav pointed out that, during the winter, the smoke from fireplaces is very prevalent.

"Wood burning is such a widespread thing in our town," Lensegrav said.

Johnson said she had no problem with the smoke from fireplaces or even farmers burning ditches and fields. She said she grew up around agriculture and isn't concerned with any of that.

The councilors explained that with so much burning going on, it complicates crafting an ordinance that would address her issue without effectively banning other commonplace activities that cause smoke.

Johnson said other communities in the state have ordinances that require yard fires to be extinguished if a neighbor complains.

"That's not our ordinance," Councilor Floyd Young said, so they couldn't address Johnson's issues with the laws currently on the books in Powell.

The discussion concluded with the council agreeing to research the issue and see if any solutions can be found. Johnson thanked them for their consideration.

Brendan Carr is visiting Wyoming to learn more about rural broadband, workforce development, and other needs particular to our area.

Carr was nominated to serve as a Commissioner of the FCC by President Donald J. Trump, and he was confirmed unanimously by the United States Senate in 2017. In 2019, after President Trump nominated him for a second term, the Senate confirmed Commissioner Carr for a term ending in 2023.

Commissioner Carr is focused on regulatory reforms that will help create jobs and grow the economy for the benefit of all Americans.

He is leading the FCC's work to modernize the rules governing the buildup of next-generation infrastructure, including 5G. His reforms are predicted to cut billions of dollars in red tape and have already accelerated deployments—helping to bring more broadband to more Americans. By updating our country's rules for building small cells, he's helped extend U.S. leadership in 5G and ensured that rural America has a fair shot at next generation connectivity.

IN OUR OPINION

Help save a life: Drive with care

People are dying at an alarming rate on Wyoming's roads and highways.

In a "normal" year, three dozen people have died in crashes by late May, which is a staggering loss. But so far, 2019 has been on a whole different level.

When a Thermopolis woman tried to pass in front of an oncoming car on May 20 — and died in the ensuing crash — she was the 63rd person to die on Wyoming's roads this year.

Measured just in terms of deaths, roughly twice as many people have lost their lives in crashes this year as compared to recent years. Measured in terms of suffering, however, the sorrow and grief is exponentially greater. There are youth who will never get the chance to grow up, there are spouses who will never get to hold their partner again and there are so many goals and dreams that will never be fulfilled.

As Wyoming Highway Patrol Lt. Kebin Haller put it in a video message last week, those 63 fatalities represent 63 families "torn apart, forever changed."

"This is not acceptable," Haller said in the Facebook post. "We can and need to do better, Wyoming."

Unfortunately, his message was quickly outdated, as the state experienced its 64th death days later. By the time you read this, the total may be even higher.

In his message, Haller challenged drivers to be responsible — "to not drive impaired, to not drive distracted, to put down your electronic devices, to buckle up and to slow down."

The reminders are familiar to us all; everyone knows that you should give your full attention to driving every time you sit behind the wheel.

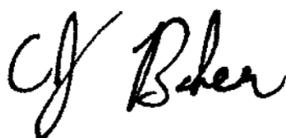

But, if we're being honest, it's awfully easy to sneak a quick peek at our buzzing phone, to leave our seat belt unbuckled or try getting to our destination just a little faster by breaking the speed limit.

It's also easy to dismiss fatal crashes as just an inevitable part of traveling, or something that only happens to "bad drivers." However, when driving a multi-ton vehicle at 70 miles per hour, it doesn't take much for a small mistake or just a brief lapse in judgment to turn fatal. Every time you fail to take driving seriously, you are taking your life in your hands — along with the lives of your passengers and anyone else on the road.

That's why it's critical we drive with care. "All fatalities are preventable," Haller said in his message, adding that "just one fatality is too many."

Tragically, we've sped well past "too many" in Wyoming this year, but it's not too late to help prevent the next horrific crash by making good decisions out on the road.

As Haller put it, "Do your part, Wyoming."

gram into our community.

There will be free events for all ages. A Star Wars costume contest, yoga story times, virtual reality gaming, a drive-in movie, bubble rockets and a Starlab Planetarium are only a few of the galactically awesome occasions we have planned for all of you! Every year we are immensely grateful to the businesses who collaborate with us to make these events free to you. We use every donation and every gift given to provide Powell's population with the very best Summer

Reading possible.

Long ago we realized that, in order to keep reading levels for children and young adults at a steady level during the summer months, we needed to offer a fun way to keep all age ranges excited about reading. In 2011 we started an adult level Summer Reading program, as well. All these years later, we continue to grow and diversify our programs and collections. The Friends of the Powell Branch Library, the Park County Library Foundation, local business owners and community members make it all possible.

If you see a library calendar or summer reading poster at one of the restaurants or stores you frequent, make sure to thank them. They are supporting literacy and fun for everyone in Powell. For more information, call the library at 754-8828 or visit our website at www.parkcountylibrary.org.

(Maggie Sullivan is the public services manager at the Powell Branch Library. Early registration for Summer Reading begins today (Tuesday), with the program running from June 3 to July 19.)

Laying out Yellowstone's priorities

Yellowstone is releasing a series of major strategic priorities that will guide short and long-term decision making over the upcoming years. The priorities focus heavily on the park's team and organization, strengthening the condition of the Yellowstone ecosystem, improving visitor experience, investing in infrastructure, and expanding partnerships and coalitions.

It's important that our priorities and actions are clear, not only to the NPS team here in Yellowstone, but to ensure our partners and the public understand our direction in these very important areas.

Each of the park's strategic priorities has a range of focus areas and actions that have been identified and will be continually refined and updated. The Strategic Priorities are:

1. Focus on the core: Success in this priority is central to Yellowstone's future and revolves around improving the working and living conditions of the Yellowstone team, how the park manages its financial resources, and how it works toward the best administrative and operational framework. An example of a specific action under this priority includes the development of a 5-year plan to substantially improve employee housing within the park. The multi-million dollar plan will work to improve existing housing, eliminate and replace 75 trailers currently used for seasonal employees, and will explore new housing partnership opportunities with gateway communities and partners.

2. Strengthen the ecosystem and heritage resources: This priority focuses on understanding and responding to the effects of climate change, promoting large landscape and wildlife conservation efforts, and protecting and improving the condition of Yellowstone's vast cultural and historic resources. Specific actions under this priority are being developed in a range of key areas including: a bison management strategy that stabilizes and potentially expands the quarantine program; working with states to protect and facilitate important wildlife migration corridors; and expanding efforts to combat the impacts of non-native species like lake trout in Yellowstone Lake.

3. Deliver a world class visitor experience: This priority aims to provide clarity and direction around how the park will handle increased visitation in upcoming years — with special focus on visitor impacts on resources, staffing and infrastructure, visitor experience, and gateway communities. Importantly, the park is moving out of the data gathering phase and beginning to determine the appropriate short and long-term actions necessary to protect resources, mitigate impacts of congestion, and improve educational, recreational, and other visitor enjoyment opportunities. This priority also focuses heavily on improving public safety and resource protection.

4. Invest in infrastructure: The park's maintenance backlog exceeds half a billion and is likely much higher. Actions within this priority include: developing a more cogent deferred maintenance reduction plan, improving the quality of data and prioritization processes, and taking better advantage of current and future funding to improve asset conditions and protect investments.

5. Build coalitions and partnerships: Yellowstone's success is predicated on strong partnerships and coalitions. The park will continue to build and align priorities with many partners including Yellowstone Forever and our incredibly generous philanthropic community, with tribes, elected officials, environmental and conservation groups, concessioners, and communities, states, and other federal cooperators.

(Cam Sholly is the superintendent of Yellowstone National Park, moving into the position in October 2018. Sholly is a U.S. Army veteran and a longtime National Park Service employee, most recently serving as the director for the service's Midwest Region.)

Under new owners, dude ranch to serve alcohol

BY CJ BAKER
Tribune Editor

After a lengthy dry spell, alcohol will again be served at a North Fork dude ranch, which is under new ownership.

On Tuesday, Park County commissioners approved a restaurant liquor license for Absaroka Mountain Lodge. It gives the establishment the ability to sell beer, wine and/or liquor — but alcohol can make up no more than 40 percent of the business's gross sales.

Craig Kenyon and Carol Crowell, formerly of Powell, recently bought Absaroka Mountain Lodge through a corporation called Gunbarrel Creek Inc. Kenyon and Crowell purchased it from Kerry and Theresa Boyd of Montana, who'd owned the ranch since 2005 through a corporation called Shooting Star Enterprises.

Although alcohol had not been served at Absaroka Mountain Lodge in the recent years, Commissioner Lee Livingston recalled that the guest ranch had a liquor license in the past.

"At least, you could buy beer there," quipped Livingston, a longtime North Fork resident.

This is the first restaurant liquor license that the county has issued in some time; until recently, the county still had full-fledged retail licenses available. They're generally more desirable for businesses, but the state caps how many of those licenses a city, town or county can issue based on their population.

County commissions and city councils can issue an unlimited number of restaurant licenses, but they're more restricted. Beyond the cap on sales, alcohol can only be dispensed in a specified, enclosed area. In contrast, a retail license allows establishments to — as First Deputy Park County Clerk Hans Odde put it — "sell anything, anywhere in their building."

Like most of the North Fork guest ranches, Odde said Absaroka Mountain Lodge will only be open seasonally.

Founded in 1917 as Gunbarrel Lodge, it lies about 13 miles east of Yellowstone National Park and about 40 miles west of Cody, off of U.S. Highway 14/16/20.

Wild West shows subject of Thursday talk

The Buffalo Bill Center of the West will host a free afternoon presentation on "The Wild West Shows and Global Human Exhibitions" on Thursday.

The event begins at 12:15 p.m. in the center's Coe Auditorium.

The presentation is led by Janne Lahti, Academy of Finland research fellow and adjunct professor of history.

Lahti's talk explores the transnational cultural exchanges that occurred through human exhibitions of various colonized people as tribute to westward expansion drawing connections to Buffalo Bill's Wild West show.

"Janne Lahti's work examines the international context of the history of the American West — a history that is often viewed only on a regional scale," said Buffalo Bill Museum Curator Jeremy Johnston. "Lahti demonstrates how the American West shaped society, culture, and economics on a global scale."

Lahti currently researches and teaches at the University of Helsinki, Finland. He has held a Fulbright fellowship, taught at the University of Arizona, been awarded the Huntington Library's Mayers Fellowship and, most recently, the Buffalo Bill Center of the West's Citizens of a Wider Commonwealth Fellowship.

Lahti's research focuses on global histories of settler colonialism, borderlands and the American West. He's an author of four books and his articles have appeared in several publications.

He serves as the editor of American Studies in Scandinavia, a peer-reviewed multidisciplinary academic journal in American studies. During the 2019-2020 academic year, he will be a visiting professor at Free University Berlin.

County wants Thermop's trash

With its landfill nearing the end of its life, the Town of Thermopolis plans to build a transfer station and haul its trash somewhere else. Park County commissioners are hoping Thermopolis officials will choose to bring their garbage to the county's landfill south of Cody. But even with commissioners recently lowering the tipping fee to $74 a ton, their rate may prove too pricey when compared to other landfills.

Commission Chairman Jake Fulkerson said he recently met with Thermopolis Town Engineer Heath Overfield, "trying to woo his garbage to Cody." (Overfield, who works for Engineering Associates, is the son of County Commissioner Dossie Overfield.)

However, after making the pitch, Fulkerson said it appeared "we'd have to get Powell and a bunch of others to drop [the rate] enough to attract" the Town of Thermopolis.

Powell currently takes its trash to Billings, Montana, where the tipping fee is $27.30 a ton — or about a third of Park County's rate.

Heart Mountain hike set for June 1

For some folks, it's an annual spring event; for others, this year may be the first time. Whether newbie or veteran, organizers say the annual Heart Mountain Community Hike is always an adventure.

This is the time of year when wildflowers are starting to brighten the land and wildlife is on the move. The hike, sponsored by The Nature Conservancy's Heart Mountain Ranch Preserve, is billed as fun for all ages. Choose an ambitious hike to the summit or just take a shorter amble enjoying the sites, sounds and smells of spring, the organizers say.

Attendees should meet at the Heart Mountain Ranch Preserve office at 8 a.m. on Saturday, June 1.

For the hike, organizers suggest bringing comfortable hiking shoes, sunglasses, water, lunch, sunscreen and clothing appropriate for changing conditions. If you tend to set a pace that moves you away from the group, be sure to have bear spray with you. And, of course, binoculars and a camera will come in handy.

Attendees are asked to leave their dogs at home.

Secretary of State Buchanan seeks judgeship

BY ANDREW GRAHAM
WyoFile.com

Secretary of State Ed Buchanan is seeking a judgeship just seven months after winning election to his statewide office and a judicial commission has submitted his name and two others for Gov. Mark Gordon's consideration.

Buchanan put in an application with Wyoming's Judicial Nominating Commission for a vacant circuit court judgeship in Goshen County. He was one of three names selected by the commission. The names now go to Gordon, who has 30 days to select a candidate.

The other two candidates are Patricia Bennett, a clerk at the Wyoming Supreme Court, and Nathaniel Hibben, a Torrington lawyer who is current president-elect of the Wyoming State Bar.

If he chooses Buchanan, Gordon will then have the opportunity to fill one of the five top statewide elected offices in his first year on the job. Buchanan's selection for the judgeship would trigger a process in which Gordon would pick from three recommendations advanced to him by the Wyoming Republican Party.

If Gordon chooses Buchanan as a judge, it will be the secretary of state's second appointment to public office in fewer than two years, and place the second unelected appointee in the secretary of state's office in the same period. Former Gov. Matt Mead selected Buchanan for the secretary of state position after the Wyoming GOP submitted his name and two others.

The previous vacancy in the secretary's office came after former Secretary of State Ed Murray resigned following allegations of sexual misconduct. After his appointment Buchanan ran successfully for the position in 2018. He won with 137,026 votes.

Executive Director of the Wyoming Bar Sharon Wilkinson said in her 17 years at that organization she had never seen a sitting statewide elected official apply for a vacant judgeship.

The Eighth Judicial District, Goshen County court is housed in Torrington, where Buchanan previously lived and practiced law. The move would carry a pay increase for Buchanan. The secretary of state earns $92,000 a year according to statute. When a new law passed by the Legislature goes into effect on July 1, a circuit court judge will earn $145,000 a year.

In a statement, Buchanan said he "felt called" to serve as a judge. "I did not lightly consider this step in putting my name forward," Buchanan said in the statement. "Such a step came after prayer and careful consideration of the needs of the State of Wyoming, my family, and the citizens of Goshen County."

Should he be selected, Buchanan said, the former Goshen County representative and speaker of the house will have completed the trifecta in Wyoming's three branches of government — legislative, executive and now judicial.

The choice was not an easy one, Buchanan's statement read.

"I faced the impossible choice knowing that I could serve my state and community in Goshen County through the Judicial System," it reads, "while also struggling with the fact that I love the work of the Secretary of State's Office."

"Ultimately, the call to serve Goshen County as a judge was strong, but the decision was made knowing that my staff at the Secretary of State's Office are prepared to smoothly transition and seamlessly accommodate the arrival of an appointed Secretary of State, if that time comes," the statement reads.

Buchanan said he would "honor" Gordon's choice of judge.

Outgoing Goshen County Circuit Court Judge Randal Arp announced his retirement in March, effective July 2. Shortly after Arp revealed his plans, his wife Pat, announced that she, too, would retire from a long term of public service. Most recently, she's served as Gordon's chief of staff.

NWC international students seek host families

Northwest College is seeking families in Park County to provide housing accommodations, meals and cultural relationships for Russian students for one month beginning Sunday, July 28.

The Year of Exchange in America for Russians (YEAR) Program awards full scholarships to outstanding Russian students to spend one academic year at institutions of higher education in the U.S. With offices in Washington, D.C., the YEAR Program is funded by the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and is administered by the American Councils for International Education.

A main element of the program includes a monthlong homestay in which host families help YEAR students acclimate to new communities through involvement in family and local activities.

“Through their daily interactions with their host families, students will gain better insight into the many American cultural traditions allowing them to see what locals like to do, where they like to go and how they live on a daily basis,” explained Amanda Enriquez, NWC Intercultural Program manager. “Most importantly, this experience will provide these students with a second family who will enrich their experience in the U.S. exponentially.”

Aside from providing daily meals and a clean, safe place to live, host families are asked to provide guidance and support for their students as they learn about life in the U.S.

After completion of the one month homestay, students will then move into the residence halls on the NWC campus to begin the academic year. Students are encouraged to maintain close contact with their host families during the program through activities such as family dinners, outings or holiday celebrations.

“When families open their homes to students from another country, it really allows them to learn about another person’s culture and interests,” Enriquez said. “Host families play a key role in helping these students achieve their dreams while studying abroad, and a lot of times, these relationships will last a lifetime.”

YEAR students undergo a rigorous selection process through a series of essays, interviews and language tests. Academic abilities, leadership skills as well as a commitment to the cultural exchange program are also major factors in the selection process.

The application deadline for host families is Saturday, June 1.

For more information about becoming a host, contact Enriquez at 307-754-6424, or Amanda.Enriquez@nwc.edu, or visit <https://www.yearprogram.org/>.

McClure, Simonson to marry

Amber Lynn McClure and Allen Richard Simonson of Powell are engaged to be married.

The bride-to-be is the daughter of Marion and Betty Jean McClure. She is the owner of Cody Paw Spa.

The groom-to-be is the son of Brenda McClure. He attended Northwest College and received three bachelor degrees. He retired from the Army after doing three tours in Iraq, and now owns Cody Paw Spa with Amber.

The couple is planning a June 8 wedding at the Powell Elks Lodge. Amy Woods will officiate the ceremony.

The matron of honor will be Lexy Boyles, and bridesmaids will be Jasmin Simonson and Kaylee French. Magdalyn Leaf will serve as the flower girl, while Elye Leaf and Samuel Leaf will be the ring bearers.

Joseph Palazzolo will be the best man, and groomsmen will be Aiden Simonson and Kyle McClure.

The couple will continue making their home in Powell.

PHS STUDENTS COMPLETE MARINE ONE PROJECT

BY TESSA BAKER
Tribune Features Editor

As Powell High School students created complex large-scale art projects in recent years — a train, submarine, space shuttle and stage-coach, to name a few — the idea of a helicopter seemed particularly challenging.

“The Blackhawk was an idea we discussed in years past, but the complexity of the shape and how we would display it always made it seem out of reach,” said Jim Gilman, who teaches art at PHS. “With the continued success and advancements in our CAD classes, and deciding to not have the main 17-foot rotor turning, the Blackhawk became an attainable goal.”

The project carried on the transportation theme of past projects.

“Our goal is to represent different uses of the helicopter, from VIP transportation to medevac and rescue efforts,” Gilman said.

The main view of the PHS project shows Marine One, a VH-60 Whitehawk Helicopter landing between the South Portico of the White House and Washington Monument.

“Passing storm clouds, lightning, and cherry blossom trees complete the view,” Gilman said. “When viewed from the inside, a UH-60 Blackhawk Medevac from the 101st Airborne can be seen in rescue efforts, with images of Hurricane Katrina and Michael in the background.”

Students’ journey to create the complex project started on the first day of school in late August, and was finished in the final weeks of classes this month.

“By the time the project was complete, about 80 students from all levels of art classes worked on the project in some way, shape, or form (including the White House, Washington Monument, mural, helicopter or display cases),” Gilman said.

He said many of the students also worked on different parts of the project in other classes, including CAD, welding, woods and graphics. Robotics student Alan Merritt designed and created the motorized and electrical systems that bring life to the display.

“Some students devoted their entire year to this project,” Gilman said. “Others spent short amounts of time ranging from an hour to about three weeks between their own personal projects.”

To construct the White House and helicopter, students used plywood, drawing board, paint and glue. The Washington Monument is made out of plywood, cement board, and traditional kitchen tile.

“The engraved tiles represent the dedication stones that can be found on the inside of the real Washington Monument,” Gilman said.

To create the trees, students used sagebrush, cotton and animal bedding.

Gilman shared photos of the progress online throughout the school year, and online supporters donated to the project. Donations include an American flag flown over the U.S. Capitol building, which now flies over the White House at PHS. A second U.S. flag, which flew over Afghanistan, was donated by the 101st Airborne. Someone also donated official Air Force One M&M’s and matches from former President George H.W. Bush’s administration. They were also sent a HMX-1 Squadron patch by a current member of that unit, which flies and maintains Marine One helicopters.

Students also incorporated hidden “Easter eggs” throughout the display — features that honor past projects.

Earlier this year, the Marine One project drew the attention of President Donald Trump, who sent a signed letter to PHS students in February. The letter is proudly displayed next to the White House, Gilman said.

Powell High School students and staff pose for a photo with the Marine One Project earlier this month. About 80 students worked on the art project throughout the school year. Students from other classes — including CAD, woods, welding, robotics and graphics — also helped with the project. Tribune photo by Carla Wensky

BY THE NUMBERS

- The official measurements of the helicopter are: 17 feet long and about 4 feet wide and 5 feet tall, with a 17-foot rotor span on a 1/3 scale. The Washington Monument is 14 feet tall and 16 inches wide at the base. The White House 7 feet long and 3.5 feet tall on a 1/24th scale.
- Using an 8.5x11 diagram of the helicopter, students then measured and multiplied that distance by 29.75 to attain the 1/3 scale. The 1/3 scale was determined because it was the largest scale they could use with the dimensions of the display room.
- The total project cost was just over $2,700, a majority of which was covered by donations. They raised over $1,900 by selling 105 PHSX-1 T-shirts online.

COLLINS HIRED AS TRAPPER MEN'S HOOPS COACH

BY DON COGGER
Tribune Sports Editor

Following an extensive search, Northwest College has hired Jay Collins as the new head coach of the men's basketball team.

"I'm very excited to be coming to NWC," Collins said. "It's a great opportunity for me."

NWC athletic director Brian Erickson said Collins' knowledge of the game — coupled with an enthusiasm for coaching — set him apart from other applicants.

"He [Collins] is personable, he has a great sense of humor and he's really passionate about basketball," Erickson said. "You want a coach who's able to take a group of boys and develop them into young men on and off the court, and I think he's passionate about doing that." Erickson also pointed to coaching experience at different levels — from junior college to Division I — as a selling point.

NEW MEXICO NATIVE BRINGS D-I COACHING EXPERIENCE TO NWC

"He loves the developmental aspect of coaching the junior college student athlete," Erickson said. "His experience shows, and his excitement to be at Northwest College and lead our program is obvious."

Erickson coached the Trappers from 2010 through 2018, with Dawud Abdur-Rahman serving as the team's interim coach for the 2018-19 campaign. NWC leaders re-opened the position at the end of the season and initially planned to hire another interim coach. However, they were impressed enough with Collins to name him as the permanent replacement.

A native of Farmington, New Mexico, Collins is no stranger to junior college athletics; he played two seasons at Cochise College in Douglas, Arizona, before finishing his collegiate playing career at Southern Utah University. Since graduation and following a short stint playing in the NBA's developmental league, Collins has served as an assistant for a couple of D-I programs, including two seasons at Northern Arizona University. He followed that with six seasons at Idaho State University in Pocatello, and most recently spent a season as the head coach of the boys' team at his alma mater, Farmington High School.

Having coached at just about every level of basketball, Collins said he was always eager to get back to coaching at the junior college level.

"NWC has fielded a successful program in the past, and I think the resources are there to be successful at a really high level," Collins said. Although he's coached at both the D-I and D-II levels, Collins described junior college as his favorite

"It's the perfect mix, you can really coach them," he said, adding, "To me, it's a purer form of basketball."

Collins always knew he'd one day get into coaching.

"Basketball is the only thing I've been relatively good at, so once I was told I couldn't do it anymore, I figured I'd try to teach other people how to do it better than me," he said.

As for what he enjoys the most about the job, Collins said it's bringing together a diverse group of people for a singular purpose.

"It's cliché, but true — the camaraderie, the team-ism, coming together from all different walks of life for a common goal," he said. "Basketball brought me all across the country, and I've recruited in Europe; you realize that all these guys with different backgrounds have a lot more in common than you initially thought."

COLORFUL CHARACTERS

Earlier this month, Powell High School's gym classes hosted their annual end of the year color run. Top right, Dakota Hansen, Kaili Wisniewski, Kabrie Cannon, Jace Bohlman, Taycee Walker, and Riley Schiller pose for a selfie after finishing the run. At right, Toran Graham crosses the finish line. "We have such a good time with it every year!" said PHS PE instructor Charli Fluty. "Even though the weather was not ideal, the kids were amazing!! PHS boys' soccer receives post-season honors

FIVE PLAYERS NAMED TO ALL-CONFERENCE, ALL-STATE TEAMS

BY DON COGGER
Tribune Sports Editor

Following a memorable season that saw the Powell High School boys' soccer team advance all the way to the 3A state championship game, five Panthers have received postseason honors.

PHS keeper Ashton Brewer, defenders Cameron Wentz and Reece Bauer, midfielder Ernie Acevedo and forward Sam Bauer were named to the 3A West All-Conference team by the Wyoming Coaches' Association; Brewer, Wentz and Acevedo were also named to the 3A All-State team.

"I was really happy for our boys, I think only Worland had more recognition than us on the conference and state level," said PHS head coach Dave Gilliatt. "Those were the number one and the number two teams in the state [Worland and Powell], and I think the state tournament proved that. So I think our team probably should share the most recognition — though to be honest, I would have liked to have a couple of more on that list."

Each coach submits a list of nominations to the WCA; included on Gilliatt's list were defender Landon Sessions, 10-goal scorer Hawkin Sweeney and Garrett Morris.

"All three of those guys can hang their hats on the fact they were starters: They played nearly 80 minutes of every single game on a team that went to the state final," Gilliatt said.

"I was really happy for our boys, I think only Worland had more recognition than us on the conference and state level!"

Dave Gilliatt, head coach

Reece Bauer was the only freshman named to the All-Conference team, an honor Gilliatt said was well-deserved.

"Reece [Bauer] made such a strong impression as an outside back, which is not easy to do — you're not scoring goals and you're not getting assists," Gilliatt said. "It's less stat-dependent and more about the impression you can make as a defender. And he was just a very tenacious player. He's a natural in that position."

Wentz began the season as an attacking forward, though when a need arose for a talented player to move to center back, Wentz got the call. The one-two punch of Wentz and Landon Sessions made for a formidable back line.

"I feel like they [Wentz and Sessions] both played better together," Gilliatt said. "I think what it came down to was Cameron [Wentz] just made a little more dramatic clearances, a little more dramatic stops. His body type and his natural style of play gave us a good passing outlet as a center back, and he knew how to use his body to win balls in the air and to challenge on the ground."

At midfield, Gilliatt said he had three deserving players in Acevedo, Sweeney and Morris, with Acevedo getting the nod for All-Conference and All-State.

"Ernie [Acevedo] has improved a lot," Gilliatt said. "I've watched him grow up as a player, and I asked him at the beginning of the season to be a bulldog at that center mid. He was a natural fit, and I know he caught the eye of Coach [Ben] McArthur over at the college. Ernie does well in working in tight spaces, and the other thing he's good at is winning the ball back. He often stifles the other attacking players; him getting All-Conference and All-State is a big deal."

Despite missing a handful of games because of a concussion, Sam Bauer was named to the All-Conference team on the strength of a solid start to the season.

"Other coaches recognized Sam's ability, and what he meant to this team when he wasn't available to us," Gilliatt said. "He made an impact on every single game he was in every single game, and he's flexible — I can put him in attacking or defending. He can do well with any of those."

Last season, Brewer split time in net with senior Gabe Katz; this year, the job was his. The sophomore recorded six shutouts on the season, making him one of the top keepers in the state.

"I think every single coach in the state recognized that Ashton [Brewer] was an excellent shot stopper," Gilliatt said. "I think they saw him kind of up-and-coming as a freshman. He has room for improvement, as do all the guys, but he's an excellent shot stopper."

Brewer also emerged as a vocal leader on the team, often addressing his teammates in team huddles.

"You don't have to be a captain to lead," Gilliatt said, "and he proved that."

As for what fans and players can expect from his style of coaching, Collins said his team will be built on speed and aggressiveness.

“We’re going to play fast,” he said. “Ideally, I’d like to press for 40 minutes, as long as we have the personnel to do that. We’re going to spread the ball around the floor to try to get easy shots, make our defense dictate our offense. We’ll be tough, and we’re going to play fast.”

Collins is taking over a team that went 10-21 last season, 3-12 in the Region IX North. Under interim coach Abdur-Rahkman, the Trappers showed flashes of brilliance, but they were heavy with sophomores. Going into the summer, Collins will basically have to build from scratch; with just a handful of returning players, he said the sooner he gets started recruiting, the better.

“Recruiting is the biggest thing,” he said. “Getting to know the returning players, there’s not many coming back, and trying to put a team together is the biggest thing. And it’s not too late to do that, in my opinion.”

Changing the culture of NWC basketball is also a priority for Collins, who said he’s ready to build for the longterm.

“Culture to me is the biggest thing — if you have a good culture, you can build on that,” he said. “That comes from holding guys accountable, and that’s something I pride myself on. Laying out the rules and the consequences and sticking to it. You’ll hear this a lot from me, but no one is bigger than the program, not even me.”

STARTING THE SEASON

On a typical Wyoming spring morning (chilly and windy with plenty of rain), a pair of special guests brought a measure of warmth to the opening day festivities of Powell Little League on Saturday, May 18. On hand to throw out the first pitch was Nicole Sanders, daughter of the late Calvin Sanders, a longtime Little League umpire and an ambassador of Powell youth athletics who died this spring. Also on hand was Calvin Sanders’ good friend Greg Anderson, who read a baseball poem that Sanders had composed. Tribune photo by Toby Bonner
